PETIS

HISTORY OF GENGHIZCAN

DS
22
.P52

LONDON 1722

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
1800

Petis, François

THE HISTORY OF Genghizcan the Great,

First Emperor of the Antient

MOGULS and TARTARS;

In Four BOOKS:

CONTAINING

His Life, Advancement and Conquests; with a short History of his Successors to the present Time; the Manners, Customs and Laws of the Antient Moguls and Tartars; and the Geography of the vast Countries of Mogolistan, Turquestan, Capschac, Yugurestan, and the Eastern and Western Tartary.

Collected from several Oriental Authors, and European Travellers; whose Names, with an Abridgment of their Lives, are added to this Book.

By the late M. Petis de la Croix Senior, Secretary and Interpreter to the King in the Turkish and Arabick Languages.

And now faithfully translated into English.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Darby in Bartholomew-Close, E. Bell in Cornhil, W. Taylor in Pater-noster-Row, W. and J. Innys at the West End of St. Paul's Church-yard, and J. Osborn in Lombard-Street, M.DCC.XXII.

Library of Congress 1867

THE HISTORY OF Genghizcan the Great, First Emperor of the Antient Moguls and Tartars; In four BOOKS: CONTAINING His Life, Advancement and Conquests; with a short History of his Successors to the present Time; the Manners, Uniforms and Laws of the Antient Algarb and Tartars; and the Geography of the vast Countries of Mogolistan, Turquestan, Capshac, Teguzgan, and the Eastern and Western Tartary.

Collected from several Oriental Authors, and Eyewitnesses of their Lives, are added to this Book.

By the late M. Petis de la Croix Senior, Secretary and Interpreter to the King in the Turkish and Arabick Languages.

And now faithfully translated into English.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Darby in Bartholomew-Close, E. Rail in Cheapside, W. Taylor in Paternoster-Row, R. and J. Dodsley at the Ward end of St. Paul's Church-yard, and J. Oakey in Lincoln's-Inn, M.DCC.XXII.

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE Prince of WALES.

SIR,

IT is with the utmoſt Reſpect, that I preſume to lay at Your Royal Feet the Hiſtory of an Aſiatick Prince, who excell'd all his Predeceſſors in Bravery and good Fortune, and made himſelf (tho not born a King) Monarch of all Tartary, Perſia, a great part of China, and many other vaſt Countries; carrying his victorious Arms as far as Muſcovy: A Prince, who was Chaſte, Juſt, and Temperate; an excellent Husband, Father, Friend and Maſter, and a great General.

I am perſuaded when the Readers of this Hiſtory will be delighted with that Great Prince's Character, they cannot fail of calling to mind thoſe Virtues which have render'd Your Royal Highneſs the Darling of our Nation; in whoſe Perſon thoſe Qualifications ſhine with the greater Luſtre, as they are heighten'd by that Candour, and general Benevolence towards Mankind, in which the Character of Genghizcan appears defective.

MAY the ſame good Fortune attend all Your Undertakings which attended His; and may Your Poſterity be as renowned as his Succeſſor and Deſcendent Tamerlain was, is the ardent Wiſh of

Your Royal Highneſs's

moſt obedient and moſt devoted humble Servant.

THE French PREFACE.

WE are indebted for this History to the late M. Petis de la Croix, Secretary and Interpreter to the King in the Turkish and Arabick Languages, who died Nov. 4. 1695. in the 73d Year of his Age, after having executed this Employment for the space of forty four Years with as much Honour and Integrity as Understanding. He is well known to the learned World by many excellent Works which he has composed. He translated the History of France into the Turkish Language, by which means he published the Grandure of our Monarchs to the farthest Parts of all Asia. He digested the three Volumes of Voyages into the the East Indies of M. Thevenot the Nephew, being his particular Friend. He also made an accurate Catalogue of all the Turkish and Persian Books which are in the King's Library. He composed two compleat Dictionaries for the French and Turkiſh Languages. And, in ſhort, when he was dying, he was about to preſent the World with the Hiſtory of Genghizcan.

HE undertook this Hiſtory by M. Colbert's Order. This great Miniſter being wholly employ'd in aggrandizing his Maſter's Glory, and putting our Nation in a condition of envying nothing which belonged to Strangers, was accuſtomed every Week to call together, either in the King's Library or his own, a certain number of learned Men; as Meſſieurs Renaudot, Charpentier, Vaillant, Bizot, Gallois, Cottelier, many learned Jeſuits, and others, to confer with them about the Sciences, in which each of them was skilled. He alſo cauſed their Works to be examined before him, and often propoſed new ones to them; and to encourage them in their Studies, obtained from the King Rewards ſuiting their Merits and Labours.

IN one of theſe Conferences, where M. De la Croix had the Honour to be call'd in, the Hiſtory of the Ottomans, by that celebrated Turkiſh Author Abulcair Taſch Kuprizade, falling into M. Colbert's Hands, he order'd M. Petis to tranſlate the Preface, and more particularly a Poem in the Book which treated of the Life and Actions of Genghizcan. The Poem being tranſlated, this great Miniſter would hear it read, and found this Mogul Hero more juſtly merited that proud Title of Conqueror of Aſia, than the famed Macedonian. He therefore order'd our learned Interpreter to compoſe this Hiſtory: And to render it more exact, he commanded him to read carefully all Authors, both both Eaſtern and European, who made any mention of this great Prince.

M. De la Croix, the better to anſwer M. Colbert's Intentions, after having tranſlated the four principal Authors Works who had writ, ex profeſſo, the Actions of Genghizcan, read all the Relations of the Travels of ſuch as made any mention of this Monarch; and by this means reports nothing which is not confirmed by the Teſtimony of Authors worthy Credit.

THIS Hiſtory, which coſt him more than ten Years Labour, is uſeful not only to the Learned who are curious to know paſt Events, or to Geographers, who have remained moſtly ignorant to this day of the Names of the Towns, Roads, Rivers, and Mountains in Grand Tartary, but likewiſe to all thoſe who trade to China, the Eaſt Indies, Perſia, or other Eaſtern Parts of the World, purſuant to the Treaty of Commerce renew'd and eſtabliſhed by the means of M. Colbert in 1708. between Lewis the Great and the Emperor of Perſia, which is highly advantageous to the French Nation, and was managed by Monſeigneur the Count de Pontchartrain, Secretary of State, whoſe Diligence and Zeal will not ſuffer him to loſe any Opportunity of ſerving his Country. Merchants will therefore doubtleſs be glad to ſee a perfect Account of this Country, and become acquainted with the Manners and Cuſtoms of its Inhabitants.

AS to the Pronunciation of proper Names, it is convenient to know, that the greateſt part of thoſe European Authors who have publiſhed Tranſlations of Eaſtern Books, have ſpelt the proper Names according to their own Fancy. M. de Herbelot, for example, has writ them very near the same as they are pronounc'd in the Indies. And this is what M. Petis has rather chose to do, than to imitate that famous Arabick Professor M. Vattier, who in those Translations he has published, tho very excellent in all things else, has so corrupted the proper Names, that one can scarce know them: for instead of writing Abdallah, he puts Gabdole; instead of Emir Almoumini, he puts Miramomolin, and so of others. Marcopolo has no less disfigur'd the Eastern Names: For Genghizcan he writes Cingiscan.

THIS History has been read and corrected by several Persons who understand the Eastern Languages, and who take place amongst Men of Learning: For the Author was not one of those opiniated Writers who think no Man on Earth capable of amending their Works. He freely consulted his Friends, and profited by their Remarks. If the late M. Herbelot had been of this Temper, his Bibliotheque Orientale had not been so full of Errors, but would have been digested into a better Order.

THE History of Genghizcan has been examined with so much the more Care, in that the Author designed in publishing it the Advantage of his Countrymen; and nothing has been neglected that could render it both useful and agreeable to the Readers. M. de l'Isle, one of the best Geographers of the Age, drew the Map, according to the Directions he received from the two Messieurs Petis de la Croix. And M. Petis, the Author's Son, not only revised this Work; but, to render it yet more worthy the Reader's Curiosity, he has added an Abridgement of the Lives of all those Authors from whom this History of Genghizcan was collected. He has also translated the Lives of a great many Eastern Historians, Physicians and others, which he designs soon to present the Publick.

the

THE

THE CONTENTS.

BOOK I.

CHAP. I. Of the Scythians or Tartars, and antient Moguls. Of Genghizcan's Country, Anceſtors, and Genealogy. Of his Birth and Name, and the Troubles he ſuffer'd during his Minority from the rebellious Chiefs or Cans of the Moguls after his Father's Death. Page 1.

Chap. II. Of Ounghcan King of the Keraites, otherwiſe known by the Name of Preſter John of Aſia. Of the Arrival of Temugin at Caracorum, and of the Conſpiracy form'd againſt him there. 20.

Chap. III. Temugin's Retreat from Ounghcan's Court. His firſt Combat with his Father-in-Law's Troops. The Moguls refuſe to pay Tribute to Ounghcan. Temugin is declared General of the Mogul Army. 37.

Chap. IV. Ounghcan's War with the Moguls. The Death of that King, and of the Prince his Son. Temugin proclaim'd Emperor of the Moguls, guls, Tartars, and other the Northern Nations of Asia. 51.

Chap. V. The Moguls War againſt the Can of the Naimans. Temugin's Expedition againſt Toucta-Bey, Can of the Merkites. Regulations of the Mogul Army. 67.

Chap. VI. The Deſcription of the General Diet of the Moguls, called in their Language Couriltay. The Eſtabliſhment of the Yaſſa, that is to ſay, the Mogul Laws. Temugin changeth his Name for that of Genghizcan. 78.

Chap. VII. The Death of Prince Boyruc. Genghizcan's Expedition againſt Toucta-Bey, and the Succeſs of it. Caſchluc's Flight to Gurcan the King of Turqueſtan, who gives him his Daughter in Marriage. A Deſcription of the Yugures, and their Religion. 90.

Chap. VIII. Genghizcan's firſt War againſt the Northern Parts of China, called Cathay; and the Succeſs of it. His Return into his own Country. His Expedition to the Deſart of Capſchac, otherwiſe called Decht. 97.

Chap. IX. Genghizcan's ſecond War with China, and the taking of Pequin the Capital City of the Northern China, or Cathay. 106.

Chap. X. Genghizcan's War againſt the reſt of his Enemies in Caracatay, Mogoliſtan, and Turqueſtan. The Perfidy of Prince Caſchluc to his Father-in-Law Gurcan. The Moguls War againſt Caſchluc. The Death of that Prince. Genghizcan's Alliance with the King of Carizme. 112.

BOOK

The CONTENTS.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I. The Alteration of the Treaty of Peace made between Genghizcan and the King of Carizme. An Abridgment of the History of the Sultans Seljukides, and the Kings of Carizme. 125.

Chap. II. An Envoy sent to Genghizcan from the Califf of Bagdad, to ruin the Interest of Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme. 132.

Chap. III. Of five great Queens, the Wives of Genghizcan; and of his four principal or darling Sons. 139.

Chap. IV. The King of Carizme's Conduct towards the Moguls. The Mogul Merchants go to Carizme. 142.

Chap. V. The Mogul Merchants are assassinated, and the Peace broken. 146.

Chap. VI. Preparations for War against the King of Carizme. The State of Asia at the time of the Moguls Irruption. 152.

Chap. VII. Genghizcan's Arrival in the Dominions of the Sultan of Carizme. The Battel of Caracou. 158.

Chap. VIII. The Siege of Otrar. 164.

Chap. IX. The Sieges of the Cities of Saganac, Uzkend, Alschasche, Fenaket or Toncat, by Touschican. 172.

Chap. X. The Siege of Cogende, and the History of Timur Melic. 185.

BOOK

The CONTENTS.

BOOK III.

CHAP. I. Genghizcan's Expedition into Tranſoxiana. The taking of the Cities of Zarnuc and of Nur. 203.
Chap. II. The Siege of Bocara. 208.
Chap. III. The Siege of Samarcand. 219.
Chap. IV. Genghizcan ſends thirty thouſand Men under the Command of three Generals, to purſue the Sultan of Carizme. Their Journey thro Coraſſana. The Death of Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme. 229.
Chap. V. The Siege of the City of Carizme, Capital of the Kingdom of that Name. The Adventures of the Queen Turcan-Catun, the Mother of the King of Carizme. 239.
Chap. VI. Genghizcan's Expedition to Nacſcheb, Termed, Bedaſchan, and other Places. 257.
Chap. VII. The Moguls Hunting. 260.
Chap. VIII. The Mogul Generals Expedition to Niſa, Caendar, and Damegane. 267.
Chap. IX. The taking of the Fortreſs of Ylale. The Captivity of the Queen Turcan-Catun, the Mother of Sultan Mehemed. The Conqueſt of the Cities of Rei, Com, and other Places in the Perſian Hircania. 273.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I. Genghizcan's Expedition to the Country of Balc, antiently called Bactriana. The Siege of Talcan. 283.

The CONTENTS.

Chap. II. Prince Tuli's Expedition againſt the Sultan Gelaleddin, Son of Sultan Mehemed. The Sieges of the Cities of Merou and Niſchabour. 290.

Chap. III. She Sieges of the Cities of Bamian, Candahar, Frontier-Towns of India on the ſide of Perſia. 301.

Chap. IV. Prince Coutoucou's Expedition againſt the Sultan Gelaleddin. The Continuation of the Siege of Bamian. 306.

Chap. V. The Battel between Genghizcan and Gelaleddin. This Sultan's Paſſage to India. 313.

Chap. VI. The Reduction of Azerbijana, or the antient Media, to Genghizcan's Obedience. The Moguls War againſt the Georgians. 323.

Chap. VII. Genghizcan's Employments during the Expedition of the Generals Hubbe and Suida in Azerbijana, and what the other Generals of the Army did. 331.

Chap. VIII. Genghizcan's Return from the Country of Iran to the Country of Touran, that is, from Perſia to Tartary. 338.

Chap. IX. The Generals Hubbe and Suida's Expedition to the Kingdom of Schirouana: Their Travels by Derbende, or the Caſpian Ports. 344.

Chap. X. Genghizcan's Departure from Sogdiana for the Diet at Toncat. The Arrival of the Princes his Sons at this Diet. 351.

Chap. XI. The General Diet held in the City of Toncat. 356.

Chap. XII. Genghizcan's Return to Caracorom, the Seat of his Empire. The Moguls Marriages. The beginning of the War of Tangut. 362.

Chap. XIII. Genghizcan's March to Tangut. The laſt Actions of the Sultan Gelaleddin at his Return from India. The Battel fought with Schidaſcou the Sovereign of Tangut. 370.

Chap.

The CONTENTS.

Chap. XIV. The Advancement of Octai Can to the great Empire of Asia. The Death of Genghizcan. 378.

AN Abridgment of the History of Genghizcan's Successors. 385.

The History of Touschi, Genghizcan's eldest Son. 386.

The Branch of the Uzbec Cans, Kings of Transoxiana, descended from the same Touschi Can, the Son of Genghizcan. 393.

The History of Zagatai Can, Genghizcan's second Son. 394.

The History of Octai Caan, third Son of Genghizcan, and his Successor. 397.

The History of Tuli-Can, Genghizcan's fourth Son. 398.

The History of Hulacou Can, the second Son of Tuli, and of his Posterity. 401.

AN Abridgment of the Lives of the Authors, out of whose Works the History of Genghizcan has been collected. 408.

The Names of the European Authors, and Travellers, who are made use of to prove the Truth of the Facts related in the History of Genghizcan. 436.

The

The Names of the twelve Years of the MOGUL Kalendar.

1. The Mouſe	1215
2. The Ox	1216
3. The Leopard	1217
4. The Hare	1218
5. The Crocodile	1219
6. The Serpent	1220
7. The Horſe	1221
8. The Sheep	1222
9. The Monkey	1223
10. The Hen	1224
11. The Dog	1225
12. The Hog	1226

For an Account whereof, ſee Page 209. of this Book.

I Cor
the ſtab nar can recommend of Genghizcan an

A Map of the NORTHERN ASIA

Calculated for M: Petis de la Croix's HISTORY of GENGHIZ-CAN
By William De l'Isle
Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris 1710.

Advertisement

The Situations of the Towns & other Places in this Map are taken from ye Eastern Geographers & the Journals of Several Travellers: If there appears any Difference between the Longitudes of this Map and those of the Book itself, the Reader will remember that we have followed some modern Observations which are more exact.

RUSSIA
Grand Bulgaria
Grand Hungary
Samara
Volga R.
Scray Kingda R.
Nogai Tartars
Calmucs
CAPCHAC or the Comanians
Valachia
Hadgitercan or Astracan
CIRCASSIA
Crim
Jaic R.
Decht-Bereké
Jenghikunt Jaxartes R.
Jund
Caracon
Sihon or Jaxartes R.
Otrar or Farab
Suganach
Tonical or Fenaket
Zarnuc
THE GETES
Disart
THE GEORGIA
Terki
Alani
Tarcou
CASPIAN SEA
Derbent
Iron Gate
Shamakhi
Tesfis
Gaxia
Shirvan
ANATOLIA
Malatia
Nasch wa
ARAN
Pilkan
Abuscount
ARMENIA
Erlat
Khoi
Tabriz Adebil
Maragat
AZERBIAN
Esterabad
Jorjan
Ithebad
TABERESTAN
Deilem
CURDISTAN
Amadan
IRAC-AGEMI
Ispahan
Bagdad
Bassa
IRAC
CHUSISTAN
Chiras
FARS
Kerman
KERMAN
Bost SEGESTAN
Candahar
ZABULESTAN
Gazna
Herat
Balc
Tocareftan Termed Samarcand
Soodiana
Bocara
Pergan
CORASSAN
Desart
Nisabur
Merou Chahjan
Merdy Errood
Mecran
Tiz
Count. of Quelagen
SEND COUNTRY OF INDIA or INDOSTAN
Moultan
Agra
Lahor
Indus R.
Ganga R.
Tropic of Cancer
MAVARALNAHAR or ZAGATAY
Carizme
Almaleg TURKESTAN
Tachkunt or Alchach
Arsiarath
Fergana Andegan
Cachgar
Berlas Congoras the Keraites
Mugal
Caracorom or Ourdoubaleg
Jeka Mogols
MOGOLS DIRLIGUIN ANCIENT MOGOLISTAN
Bercont
Courlas
Kingd. of Naimans
Cachine
Ardiche Merkites
Jurge
Couaquege
Almi R.
Dilon Ildac
MOGOLS NIRON
Sandy-Deserts
Niron Kaiat
Manherulle
Sou Mogols or Tartars
Tendouc
Jagerats
Egricaia
Ergimul
Incout
Tomat
Campion
Sukuir
KINGD. OF TANGUT
the Mercats
Kingd of Courg or Corea
Cambalek or Pekin CATHAY
Aven Couh
Walt
Yellow R.
Balloutai
Cacou
Yellow R.
Yarcandram R.
CHINA
MANGI
THE COUNTRY OF TURK-HEND
Chage
Tebet KINGDOM OF TEBET
Gebel aftomoun
CARAJATHAY OR COUNTRY OF THE CALMACS Amol R.
Iata R.
THE COUNTRY OF CREQUIR
The Polar Circle
The Mountains of Caucasus or Caf
Jaick R.
Lake
Scale of 100 Leagues of one Hours travelling each.
50 100

THE HISTORY OF GENGHIZCAN the Great.

CHAP. I.

Of the Scythians or Tartars, and antient Moguls. Of Genghizcan's Country, Anceſtors, and Genealogy. Of his Birth, and Name, and the Troubles he ſuffer'd during his Minority from the rebellious Chiefs or Cans of the Moguls after his Father's Death.

IF the Greatneſs and Rapidity of Conqueſts, the Variety of Events, the Downfal of Empires, and Eſtabliſhment of the greateſt Monarchy that ever the World knew, can recommend a Hiſtory, without doubt this of Genghizcan and his Succeſſors will be well re-ceiv'd. This Prince laid the Foundation of a Monarchy greater in its Extent than thoſe poſſeſſed by Alexander or Auguſtus; for he extended his Dominions to more than eighteen hundred Leagues from Eaſt and Weſt, and above a thouſand from North to South [1]. It likewiſe flouriſh'd for more than one whole Age; that is to ſay, from the Elevation of Genghizcan to the Throne, to great part of the Reign of Timur Caan, his fifth Succeſſor in the Chineſe Empire. But what is yet more extraordinary, is, that Genghizcan had much fewer Forces when he began his Conqueſts, than Alexander or Cæſar, and that he kept them with as much Prudence as Valour. He even excell'd all his Succeſſors put together in the number of his Victories; and was not contented with the ſingle Title of Conqueror, but ſtrove to merit that of a Lawgiver alſo: tho this appear'd incompatible with the continual martial Employments which his almoſt inceſſant Wars engaged him in. Thus he made himſelf acknowledg'd to be the greateſt Prince that ever fill'd the Eaſtern Throne; and all Hiſtorians have given him the higheſt Titles and Encomiums that ever Emperor was honour'd withal [2]: They ſirname him the Sultan [3] of the Moguls and Turks, the Conqueror [4] of the World, the only King of Kings, the Support of Princes, the Maſter of Thrones and Crowns: they likewiſe ſay that God never inveſted any Sovereign

Abulcair in his Tarikh Aloſman, p. 1.

Beyzavi in his Nizam Attavarikh Divanaliuſcha.

[1] We are ſole Ruler of the Earth, from the ſartheſt Eaſt even to the Weſt.

[2] The Prince and Chief of the Moguls was Genghizcan.

[3] Sultan of the Moguls and Turks, ſole King of Kings, Poſſeſſor of the Crown and Throne.

[4] The conquering Genghizcan.

on on Earth with so great Authority. Nevertheless, how considerable soever this History may make this Monarchy appear to be, yet it must be confess'd, that till this time we in Europe have had very little Knowledge of this People, or knew what the Moguls were, from whence descended, or who have reign'd over them. We have little Knowledge of their several Countries and Tribes, altho Genghizcan's Successors have carry'd their victorious Arms even into Hungary and Bohemia, where they fought a famous Battel in the Year 1242[5]; and they have likewise had Differences with the French in Syria on several occasions. And before this time Hulakou, Grandson to Genghizcan, had ruined the famous Empire of the Califs, or Successors of Mahomet, after having cut off the Head of Mustasem Billah, the last of the Abassides Califs, in the City of Bagdad, in 1258. Notwithstanding all these remarkable Events, and that there are yet living at this day some of the Descendants of this Prince, as well in Asia as in Europe, without mentioning those in India, who possess the mighty Empire whose Prince is call'd the Great Mogul, who is descended from Tamerlain the Great, who sprung from Genghizcan by the Mother's Side, in the fifth Generation.[6] Maugre all this, I say, these known Facts, and the Mirconde in Rouzet Assafa.

Calvisius, p. 807.

Bin Abdallatif in Lubbattarikh.

Hezarfen in Tangih.

[5] Henry Duke of Silesia was kill'd. The King of Hungary saved himself in Austria, whose Prince stripped him of all the Riches his Queen had sent him to keep. He was at last exil'd into Sclavonia, where he past the rest of his Days in extreme Misery.

[6] The Cans of Crim or little Tartary Precopensis, who descended from Touschican the Son of Genghizcan: the Uzbecs who established themselves in 1498. in the Kingdom of Transoxiana, as also in Capschac.

actual Existence of so many Princes of the Race, it is most surprizing that this Nation is so little known to us in Europe [7].

Schicardus. It is true, that the Empire of the present Moguls is new, it not being above a hundred and fifty Years since it was founded by Humayoun in Indostan [8]; and it is more than five hundred Years since Genghizcan was proclaim'd Emperor of the Moguls and Tartars: but both Nations Hezarsen. had the same Original. And in this History the Moguls of Tartary are call'd the antient Moguls, only to distinguish them from the Moguls of India, who are more known.

But to return to Genghizcan, all the Moguls and Tartars of all sorts acknowledge him to be the greatest of all their Princes. [9] He was Abulcair, p. 1. the Son of a Can named Pisouca, or Yesouca, who had reigned in the antient Mogolistan, a Country situate in Great Tartary, and in a Province call'd Caracatay. This Great Tartary in Asia, as well as the little Tartary in Europe, are no other Countries but those which in past times were call'd Scythia. They contain'd many Kingdoms, but they are now divided into so many petty Monarchies, that it is almost impossible to give a perfect Account of the Number or Names of them all.

The Eastern Authors are content to divide them into four Parts. The first of which is Capschac, composed of many great Provinces, amongst which is that of the Getes, situate to the Eastward of the Moguls, and to [7] Ut vix quisquam nostrûm ejus nomen audierit.

---

[8] The Moguls of the East Indies are descended from the antient Moguls by Tamerlain.

[9] In Caracatay was a great Can who was called Pisouca, the Son of Purtan.

the

the Northward of Tranſoxiana, and the Country which the River Sihon * waters. The ſecond Diviſion is Zagatay, which was call'd by the Antients Tranſoxiana, and by the Arabs Maouarannahar. The third is Caracatay, which contains Turqueſtan, the Country of the Naimans, the Country of the Gelayrs, of whom the Keraites make but a part; the Country of the Yugures, Tangut, Khothan or Khyta or Koutan; the Country of the Calmucks, and the Kingdom of Courge, which borders on China and on the Sea. The fourth part is compos'd of the antient Mogoliſtan, which is Gog and Magog, whoſe Situation is ſo differently deſcrib'd by Hiſtorians, tho it is indeed the Country poſſeſs'd by Genghizcan: Some have placed it in Aſia Minor, others only in Lydia, others in Colchis and in Hyberia; and ſome Travellers have placed it in the Country of the firſt Scythians, beyond China, to the North Eaſt of Aſia, ſaying, to ſupport their Conjectures, that the Children of Magog, the ſecond Son of Japhet, went from the North Parts of Europe to the North Parts of Aſia, where they gave their Name to the Country they inhabited. In a word, this Country is ſituate in the moſt Eaſtern Part of Aſia, to the Northward of China, and was always well-peopled. The Oriental Writers call its Inhabitants Moguls, and the Europeans have given them other Names.

* Oxus.

In the time of Genghizcan's great Grandfather, they made a vaſt progreſs, and advanc'd as far as Caracatay, where they oblig'd ſome Cans to pay them Tribute; but in the twelfth Century, in which Genghizcan was born, they were Tributaries to the King of the Keraites.

Fad'allah in Tarikh Gazany.

In the ſeventh Age there were two ſorts of Moguls, the one called Dirlighin Moguls, and the other Niron Moguls: the Sequel of this Hiſtory will ſhew why they were thus call'd. The Dirlinghin Moguls were the Nations of Congorat, Berlas, Mercout, Courlas, and many others. And the Inhabitants of Merkit, Tanjout, Mercat, Joumogul, Nironcaiat, Yecamogul, and ſome others beſides, were call'd Niron Moguls; amongſt whom we muſt obſerve that the Yecamogul and Nironcaiat properly belong'd to Genghizcan's Family.

The Word Cayat ſignifies a Smith. Cabalcan, the Great Grandfather of Genghizcan, to make himſelf diſtinguiſh'd from the other Cans of the Tribe of Niron his Relations, added the Name of Cayat to that of Niron; which Name his particular Tribe were known by: Since which time, this Name, as a Title of Honour, has remain'd not only to the Tribe, but to the Can himſelf, who is the Head of them all. The Origin of this Word was deriv'd from a certain People who liv'd at the remoteſt Northern Parts of Mogoliſtan, which were call'd Cayat, becauſe their Chiefs had heretofore erected a Foundary for Iron-work in a Mountain called Arkenekom, which gain'd them a great Reputation, and made this Branch of the Moguls highly eſteem'd, by the great Advantage all the Moguls Country receiv'd from this Invention[1]; they therefore called theſe People the Arkenekom-Smiths. And Genghizcan's Anceſtors being a-kin to them by Alliances with this People, [2] ſome miſtaken

Rubruquis.

[1] They had never before that time had the Art of making uſe of Iron.

[2] Tunc temporis Chingis faber quidam erat in populo Moal, & furabatur de animalibus Unç Gan quod poterat, &c.

Wri-

Writers have publiſh'd, that this Prince was the Son of a Blackſmith, and had been of that Trade himſelf. What occaſion'd them to fall into this Error was, that every Mogul Family, to preſerve the Memory of theſe illuſtrious Founders, or Smiths, were accuſtom'd the firſt Day of the Year to celebrate a Feaſt, during which they erected a Forge, with its Bellows, in which they lighted a Fire, and heated a Wedge of Iron, which they beat with Hammers upon an Anvil; and this Beating was preceded and concluded with Prayers. Theſe Writers doubtleſs, not knowing the Meaning of this Ceremony, and ignorant of the Reaſon why the Sirname of Cayat was given to Genghizcan's Family, were perſuaded that this Can had been a Smith, and that in Thankfulneſs to God for having raiſed him to the Throne, they had eſtabliſhed this Ceremony. Thus having ſearched no farther into the Hiſtory of the antient Moguls, they made Genghizcan paſs for a mean Perſon, whoſe Elevation to the Empire was owing to nothing but his good Fortune.

But thoſe Hiſtorians who have made a curious ſearch into Antiquity, to diſcover the Origin of this Prince[3], have had other Sentiments of him. They all ſpeak of his Father Piſouca Behader[4], as of a Can the moſt conſiderable amongſt the antient Moguls: He had, ſay they, two Kingdoms of great Extent; he had married Oulon Aikeh, the Daughter of a Abulcair. Bin Abdallatif. Marrakeſchy in Almaſalic, or Almamalic. Condemir in Habib Aſſuyar.

[3] This Emperor was Maſter of two Kingdoms, over both which he ruled.

[4] The Mogul Emperors, to the number of twenty one, have reigned in Perſia 150 Years; the firſt of which was Genghizcan the Son of Piſouca.

Can, his [5] Relation, who had gained many Victories over his Enemies. [6] It may be plainly seen by this that the mean Birth they report him to have had is purely the effect of the Ignorance or Malice of these Writers; whereas his Father was descended, in a direct Line for seven Descents, from Buzengir sirnamed the Just, whose Reputation was so great both in the Eastern and Northern Parts of Asia, that there was no considerable Prince who would not gladly have past for his Relation, or been proud of being ally'd to him. [7] We may then rest assured that Genghizcan the Son of Pisouca was born a Prince or Can.

* Remus and Romulus Sons of Mars. Alexander the Son of Jupiter.

As almost all Empires * and illustrious Families have their fabulous Stories and false Miracles to grace their Beginnings, the Moguls have not failed to have theirs, and have rather chose to corrupt their History than to let it pass unadorn'd with something marvellous. They have attributed strange Revelations to Genghizcan; and to gain the greater Veneration from the People, they have even deify'd him: those who were most interested in his Advancement, have had the insolence to make him pass for the Son of God; but his Mother, more modest, said only, that he was the Son of the Sun: but not [5] They were all Emperors of the East, and the greatest of them all was Buzengir Can.

---

[6] The greatest of these was Buzengir, from whom all the Mogul Cans descended.

[7] Bin Abdallatif in his second Chapter of his Lubbattaouarikh says, that Genghizcan lived in the days of Abou Muslim Merouzy, who according to the Historian Almakine was in the days of Merouana the elder, the last of the Ommiades Califs. This Abou Muslim was he who took the Diadem from the Ommiades Califs, and gave it to the Abassides, A. D. 749. Heg. 132.

being

being bold enough to aver that she was personally belov'd by this glorious Planet, she pretended to derive this fabulous Honour from his ninth Predecessor; and his Partizans reported, that Buzengir was the Son of the Sun.

The Turks and Tartars believe that the Mother of Buzengir was the Root from whence all the Mogul Emperors sprung: and History, or fabulous Story, has given ground to Historians to report, that a Woman was the first of this illustrious Family, which cannot be traced farther than her: she is called Alancoua[1]. She had been married, and had born two Sons, the one named Bactout, and the other Balactout, according to Marcopolo's Report: other Authors call them Belkeda and Yekeda. 'Tis said that Douyan-Byan her Husband died some time after; and that instead of thinking of marrying again, being esteem'd a very vertuous Lady, she lived a retired Life, and easily made the World believe that she applied her self wholly to the well educating of her Children: Nevertheless some time after she appear'd to be big with Child[2], at which her deceased Husband's Relations murmur'd, and she was at last forced by them to appear before the chief Judge of the Tribe. It is true, she made no scruple of doing it, but went boldly to the Judge, and desired him to give attention to what she should relate, and weigh well every Marrakeschy.

Marcopolo.

Marrakeschy.

[1] It is affirm'd that Genghizcan derived his Original from a Woman called Alancoua.

[2] She became with child; they accused her of a Crime, and carried her before the Judge, who question'd her about it: she said she had not had conversation with any Man living, and was upon her Bed, when a Light appear'd which penetrated three times into her Body.

circum-

circumſtance of what had happen'd to her, before he paſt his Judgment on her. The Judge asked her by whom ſhe was with child: ſhe Mirconde. anſwer'd that no man had occaſioned it, but that one day lying negligently upon her Bed, an extraordinary Light appeared, illuminating the dark Room where ſhe lay; that this Light, whoſe exceeding Brightneſs even blinded her, ſeemed to environ her, and three times ſhe felt it penetrate even into her Body. [3] And this good Lady being deſirous to prove her ſelf innocent to the People, and to perſuade them that her conceiving with child was a Prodigy, and not naturally, ſhe is ſaid to have added, that each time the Light penetrated her Body, ſhe Marrakeſchy. conceived a Son; and therefore they muſt wait till the time of her Delivery, and that if ſhe brought into the world three Male Children, it was an inconteſtable proof of the Truth of what ſhe told them; but on the contrary, if ſhe brought not three Sons, ſhe would ſubmit to ſuffer the moſt cruel Torments they could invent. The time of her Delivery being come, ſhe ſilenced the Calumnies her Husband's Relations had raiſed of her, and juſtified her Virtue [4] by bringing three Sons, who in proceſs of time gave their Names to three conſiderable Tribes, of which they were the Chiefs.

Mirconde. Buzengir was one of theſe three Sons, and the Heads of their Deſcendants were called Nouranyoun, that is to ſay, Children of Light. This Fable hath cauſed ſome Authors to call Genghiz-

---

[3] I conceived with child, and I am big with three Sons; wait till I am deliver'd, and if I bring three Male Children, you will be convinced of the Truth of what I ſay: if I bring not three Sons, do with me whatſoever you think good.

[4] She brought into the world three Male Children.

can

can the Son of the Sun, believing him to be deſcended from Alancoua by Buzengir, his Predeceſſor in the ninth degree. Marrakeſchy an Arabian Hiſtorian, who relates this Fable, profeſſes that he does not credit it, and that he is fully perſuaded this Lady only invented it to avoid the Death which by her Crime ſhe had merited[5]: but the Perſian Condemir, a celebrated Hiſtorian, compares the Chaſtity of Alancoua to that of the Moon; and after having related the Fact in a more modeſt manner, affirming that the Light enter'd into her Mouth, and thence deſcended into her Womb, adds, that ſhe was really brought to bed of three Sons, as ſhe had foretold: And this Prediction, being thus verified, made her be afterwards look'd on as a Saint or Propheteſs.

It is moſt certain, that the Moguls look on this Fable as a ſacred Truth, and that it is held a great Miracle amongſt them; and they remain perſuaded that God ſending his Light to Alancoua, deſign'd that a Prince ſhould be one day born of the Deſcendants of this Woman, who ſhould avenge God on Mankind for all the Injuſtice committed by them on Earth; and they believed Genghizcan to be that Prince.

Theſe three Children, whoſe Names were Bucan, Bosky and Buzengir, no ſooner appear'd in the world, but Superſtition conſecrated Alancoua's Cheat to the People, and diſtinguiſh'd theſe her three laſt Sons from all the other Moguls, and the People gave to them and their Succeſſors the Sirname of Niron[6]: I ſay, to Mirconde.

[5] She invented this Fiction only to avoid being put to death.

[6] Corrupting the Word Nouranyoun, which ſignifies Children of Light.

theſe

these three last Sons, for her other Children were called Dirlighin, to distinguish that they were only Moguls born without a Miracle.

The same Condemir makes Alancoua to be descended from Noah; [7] he says, that she was the Daughter of Tchoubinecan, whose Ancestors he makes to be Oguz, Caracan, Mogolcan and Turk, who was the Son of Japhet, the Son of Noah: this Turk is the Person from whom the Turks pretend to proceed, he was the first King of the Eastern Tartary, in the days of Cayamerres the first King of Persia.

In fine, Genghizcan, according to the Report of Fadlallah who writ his Life, had for his Father Pisouca Behader, and for his Grandfather Purtan the Son of Cabalcan, who sprung from Tumenecan Son to Baisancourcan, whose Father was called Caiducan; this last was the Son of Toutomitencan, who had for his Father Boucacan the Son of Buzengir, sirnamed the Just.

Bin Abdallauf. Amongst these Princes there were particularly three, who have render'd themselves worthy our notice: Buzengir, by a thousand Virtues, and by his Quality, being King of Cotan; Cabalcan made himself the Admiration of all Asia by his Courage; and Pisouca, the Father of Genghizcan, was fam'd for having brought under his Command the greatest part of the Chiefs of the Mogul Nations, with the Kings of Caracatay, who troubled his Quiet: he vanquish'd them, notwithstanding they frequently receiv'd Succours from the King of the northern Parts of China, or from Cathay. The last Battel that Pisouca fought, before the Birth of Genghizcan, was against a People called Soumouguls, or Tartars: To revenge himself for an Affront he had received of them, he caused his Forces to march to their Frontiers, enter'd and pillag'd their Country. Temugincan, General of several Hords or Tribes, came to drive him thence; but Pisouca went to meet him, and put him to flight after a bloody Battel, and return'd with Honour to his Country-House, where he commonly resided, called Dilon Yldac, in Yeca-Mogolistan. An. Dom. 1154. Heg. 549.

[7] Turk, the Son of Japhet, succeeded his Father; the Turks call themselves Sons of Japhet. He was the first Turkish King, as Kayoumerres is reported to have been the first King of Persia.

ther

To perpetuate the Memory of this Victory, he gave the Name of the Can he came from vanquishing, to a Child of which Olon Ayke, the first of his Wives, was soon after brought to Bed [1], calling him Temugin. [2] And congealed Blood being found in the Infant's Hands, [3] Pisouca was much surprized, it appearing to him an extraordinary Accident; he therefore, according to the Custom of the Moguls, consulted the Astrologers and Southsayers [4]; but he was not content with their Conjectures. And Soughoudgin his Relation, and first Minister, a [5] Man of great Capacity, very skilful in warlike Affairs, and one who had acquir'd much Knowledge in China, where he had long resided; I say, this Soughoudgin was the only Person Condemir. Mirconde. Texeira. Condemir.

---

[1] Genghizcan was born Anno Domini 1154. in the Reign of Lewis the seventh King of France; and this Year was the Year of the Hog, according to the Mogul Calendar.

[2] Cadrikhun fesurde Dermucht Dacht.

[3] He was first named Temugin.

[4] Genguizcan Hijo de Sukik Badur nacio corriendo elano dela Hyxara, 546.

[5] Pisouca called him Temugin.

who

An. Dom. 1154. Heg. 549. Texeira.

who could satisfy the Mogul Can; [6] he told him, That the Planet that reign'd at his Son's Birth, shew'd that he should have many Enemies to combate with; and that the Blood observ'd in his Hands foretold that he should stain the Fields with their Blood, and overcome them all; and that he should in a little time be Grand Cham of all Scythia, because the House of his Nativity [1] in his Horoscope was Libra, which was a celestial Sign, and the seven Planets at that time were all in that Sign.

In effect, the Eastern Authors say in their figurative Stile, 'That the Air or Wind, impatient of his Severity, blew with such Violence in Asia in the time of his Reign, that many thousands of People were destroy'd.'

Condemir.

This Prediction pleased Pisouca: He soon conceiv'd mighty hopes equal to what it promised, and thought he could see in his Son Temugin's Face all the Presages of an heroick Mind. Nor was he deceiv'd in his Conjectures: This young Prince had scarce attain'd to his ninth Year, when he would apply himself to no other Exercise than Arms.

Abulcair.

The great Minister Soughoudgin died before this time, but he left a Son called Caraschar Nevian, who was a Man of great Parts and Learning. Pisouca chose him to breed up [2] Temugin; and the Sequel proves that he made no ill choice.

---

[6] Quando Chinguizcan nacio, truxo en sus dos manos a pretedo en cada una dellas un poco de Sangre que fue cierto pronostico de su crueldad.

[1] His Horoscope was Libra, a celestial Sign, and all the seven Planets in it.

[2] Seeing his Son of a noble Genius, he committed him to the Care of an Atabec, or Governour, of high Birth and Quality.

About

About this time Piſouca ſaw the Courſe of his Proſperity croſs'd by an adverſe turn of Fortune. The King of China took and kept him long a Priſoner in his Dominions, and treated him very ill; but Piſouca had the good Fortune at laſt to break his Chains. He bribed thoſe that guarded him, and found a way to eſcape to the Yeca-Mogul; where being come, he thought of nothing but how to revenge himſelf upon the King of China. In order to which, he married his Son Temugin (tho he was not thirteen Years old) to a Princeſs who was Daughter to the Can of Naiman, who had as much Cauſe as he to hate the King of China. Theſe two Cans were deſigning to go and attack this Prince with all their united Forces, but Death prevented them [3]: for Piſouca died, and then all things were quite alter'd in leſs than a Year's ſpace, and put into a very ill Poſture. An. Dom. 1166. Heg. 562. Bin Abdallatif.

Piſouca having made war with the People of Tanjout, Merkit, and ſeveral other Tribes of the Branch of Niron, his Relations, and forc'd them to acknowledge him for their Sovereign; ſoon after his Death all theſe Nations revolted, the Cans of Tanjout and Merkit, Gemouca Couſin to Prince Temugin, and ſeveral Heads of other Tribes whom Piſouca had ſubjected, join'd together, and came to attack Temugin, who, notwithſtanding his Youth, courageouſly ſet up his Standard [4], animated by his Mother's Example, who ſhow'd her ſelf a noble Princeſs, ſuch as it became Piſouca's Wife to be. He Bin Abdallatif.

[3] When Piſouca died, Genghizcan was but thirteen Years old; Ann. Heg. 562. It was in 1166. two Years or thereabouts after the Birth of Philip Auguſtus King of France.

[4] It was a Staff, at the end of which a Horſe's Tail was faſten'd, which ſerved for a Standard in the Armies.

An. Dom. 1166. Heg. 564. exhorted his Subjects to defend themselves, and with her, putting himself at the Head of his Army, march'd to his Enemies, and immediately gave them battel with good Success. But Fortune in the end turn'd against him; he was beaten, and Temugin fell several times into his Enemies hands, yet had always the luck to escape.

Mirconde. Being in the fourteenth Year of his Age, he espoused Purta Cougine, the Daughter of a Mogul Can, the Chief of the Nation of Congorat, and Kinsman to Ounghcan King of the Keraites.

Ounghcan King of the Keraites, called Prester John. By this Lady he had a Daughter that Year: [s] But the Year following a powerful Party of the Inhabitants of Merkit having learn'd that Temugin was gone from his Kingdom on an Expedition, went into Nironcaiat to plunder it, it belonging to one of his Tribes. They surprized those few Forces that guarded it, and after a slight resistance, they enter'd and carried off all that was valuable, as also the Princess Purta Cougine, who was big with her second Child, and sent her to the King of the Keraites, thinking it would much oblige him to put into his power a Princess of such extraordinary Beauty as she was.

The King of the Keraites certainly receiv'd this Present with much Joy; but he always look'd on Purta Cougine as a Father on his Child; and tho Temugin had a great many Enemies in his Court who press'd him to marry this Lady himself, he answer'd, that he could not marry his Son's Wife. He spoke thus, because in the time that he made a League of Friendſhip with Piſouca, he called Temugin his Son; he therefore treated her as if ſhe had been his own Daughter. An. Dom. 1168. Heg. 564.

[s] The Persecutions Temugin suffer'd from the neighbouring Cans or Princes.

time

So ſoon as Temugin heard that his Wife was in the King of the Keraites Hands, he order'd a Nevian [6] to go and demand her in his Name, and to acquit himſelf of this Commiſſion with all Diligence. The Nevian obey'd, and was no ſooner arrived at Caracorom, where this King kept his Court, but he obtained Audience; and after having made him the uſual Compliments, he declared the Subject of his Embaſſy. The King received him favourably, and granted all he deſired; he even committed the Princeſs to his Care, charging him to treat her with all the Reſpect and Tenderneſs that he in duty owed to his Monarch's Wife.

The Princeſs Purta Cougine was ſo near her time, that ſhe was obliged to ſtop for ſome Days on the Road; in which time ſhe was deliver'd of a lovely Son, whom ſhe cauſed to be wrapt up in ſoft Paſte, and ſo carried in her Lap, without harming its tender Limbs. This ſucceeded ſo well, that when ſhe arriv'd at Temugin's Palace, notwithſtanding the tedious Journey ſhe had gone, the Child was found to be in perfect Health. The Care ſhe had taken of this young Prince was very acceptable to her Lord: He call'd him Jougi [7]. And now altho Temugin had continued to ſupport a War for ſeven or eight Years after his Father's Death, and that Oulon Ayke his Mother uſed all her Efforts to maintain him on the Throne Condemns his Father had left him in, yet of neceſſity he muſt at laſt ſink under the weight of ſo many Enemies; and therefore it was no wonder that he was in the end taken Priſoner by the Tribe of Tanjout. [8] And what was more grievous to him than his Priſon, was, that his own Tribe of Niron Cayat, ſeduc'd by Toucta Bey, Can of the Merkites, the moſt powerful of all his Enemies, revolted at the ſame time, and took up Arms againſt him. He again had the good Fortune to eſcape from his Enemies hands by his Wiſdom; and then he began wiſely to conſider, that tho he had again eſcaped, yet he muſt now yield to Neceſſity, and provide a Retreat for himſelf, in caſe his Enemies refus'd to make a Peace with him; and that ſuch a Retreat could not be procur'd from any Prince, but on very diſadvantageous Terms. He therefore made all the Advances poſſible to bring the Cans to an Accommodation. He offer'd them all they could deſire; but they having no other Deſign than entirely to ruin the Family of Piſouca, rejected all his Propoſals, in ſuch ſort, that they invaded and uſurp'd the greateſt part of his Dominions. He uſed many vain Efforts to reſiſt them; ſo that at length, deſpairing to retrieve his Loſſes, he took a Reſolution to take refuge under the King of the Keraites, who he flatter'd himſelf would give him a good Reception, becauſe Piſouca his Father had before aſſiſted this Prince againſt his Enemies.

[6] That is to ſay, a Prince of that Court.

[7] In the Mogul Language Jougi ſignifies happily arrived.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

About this time Temugin had a Dream that preſag'd his future Greatneſs. He dream'd

[8] The Tribe of Niron, who had been ſubdued by Piſouca, abandon'd Temugin, and put themſelves under the Banner of the Tribe of Tanjout.

that that his Arms were grown of an extraordinary length, that he had a Sword in each of his Hands, and that the Point of that in his right Hand was turn'd towards the East, and the Point of that in his Left to the West. He communicated this Dream to the Queen his Mother, who explain'd it in a manner suiting the ambitious Ideas she had conceiv'd of him. She told him, that these two Swords prefigured to him the Empire of two Parts of the World. An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566. Marrakeſh. chy.

Flatter'd with such vast Expectations, he was confirm'd in his Design of retreating to the Grand Can's. To this effect, he sent a Prince, or Nevian, to Caracoròm, and did not in vain implore the Protection of Ounghcan: The King granted him an Asylum in his Court; and sent him word by the Nevian, that he might look on him as a Man who thought himself absolutely bound to his Service, by the singular Obligations he lay under to his Father Pisouca. Temugin, thus assured of the Grand Can's Protection, had nothing more to do but contrive his Retreat. He left the Management of his Kingdom to his Uncle Utagekin, and marry'd the Queen Oulon Ayke, his Mother, to the Emir Buzrac, whom he made to sit on his right hand above all the other Princes; and then he departed with Caraschar to go for the King of the Keraites Court. [9] Caraschar took all the Precautions imaginable for the Safety of his Prince whom he had the Honour to accompany. He chose six thousand Soldiers for his Guard, [9] Accompany'd by Caraschar, he took refuge under Ounghcan.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

[1] and engaged all his faithful Servants to follow him; giving them hopes that the Grand Can would not fail to lend Assistance to Temugin, and re-establish them in their Fortunes, to the Confusion of their Enemies. Thus the brave Son of Pisouca put himself at the Head of those who would follow his Fortune; which tho but few in number, and appearing an inconsiderable Band of Forces, yet in respect of their Courage and Fidelity to their Prince, were formidable.

CHAP. II.

Of Ounghcan King of the Keraites, otherwise known by the Name of Prester John of Asia. Of the Arrival of Temugin at Caracorom, and of the Conspiracy formd against him there.

Matthew Paris.

BEFORE we speak of the Reception Ounghcan gave Temugin, I think it will not be improper to relate what Historians have said of this King, because he was not only a Prince of glorious Memory, but also a Person who has a considerable share in this History.

His Predecessors had been powerful Lords in the Northern Parts of Asia, that is to say, in Mogolistan, in Gelair, Turqueſtan, and some other Parts of Caracatay. Some of his [1] Pisouca being dead, this young Prince went to Ounghcan, who was King of Caracatay.

An-

Anceſtors had even aſſum'd the Title of Padiſcha [2]; but their Greatneſs in time decay'd. And his Family, which was one of the moſt illuſtrious in all Caracatay, in the Country of Gelair, contain'd ſix great Branches or Tribes of Dirlighin Moguls, amongſt whom were the Keraites, who made cruel Wars with their Neighbours. The Grandfather of Oungh-can, whoſe Tribe reſided at Caracorom, was one of the moſt conſiderable and moſt valiant Princes of the Keraites, but at the ſame time one of the moſt unfortunate. Several Cans of Caracatay combined againſt him, and vanquiſh'd him twice; and one amongſt the reſt, named Naour, his Relation and next Neighbour, having drawn him into an Ambuſcade near a Wood, ſeized and immediately ſent him under a ſtrong Guard to the King of Courga [3] in China, where he finiſh'd his Life in a ſtrange manner; for the King of Courga cauſed him to be bound, and ſow'd up in a Sack, and cruelly let him expire on a wooden Aſs.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

Fadlallah, p. 38.

[4] The Widow of Mergous, which was the Name of this unhappy Prince, inconſolable for his Loſs, and having a lively Senſe of the unworthy Uſage given her Husband, took a Reſolution to be reveng'd, whatever it coſt her; and you ſhall ſee in what manner ſhe obtain'd her Ends. Tho Naour was the principal Cauſe of her Grief, and Object of her Hate, ſhe feign'd herſelf to be angry with none but the King of Courga, and caus'd Naour to be told, after ſhe had been fifteen Months a

[2] Which ſignifies Emperor.
[3] Some pretend that this Courga was Corea.
[4] She was call'd Contouky.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

Widow, that being resolv'd to leave off her Mourning, she passionately desired to divert her self with his Company; and that if he yet retain'd any part of that Affection he had profess'd to have for her before her Marriage with Mergous, she should not refuse to make him her Husband: In fine, that if he appprov'd of what she propos'd, of making merry with her, he should prepare to receive her, for she would forthwith come to him, with only a few of her Attendants; and that she would take care to bring with her good store of Bourachios, or Leather Barrels, filled with an excellent Cammez, or Drink [s]. Naour falls into the Snare, and sends the Princess word back, that nothing could be more agreeable to him than her Company. The Lady immediately makes ready to go; and after having sent before her a hundred Sheep, and ten Mares, she sets forward, attended by Chariots, loaden with great Vessels made of Ox-hides, full of Cammez. Being arrived near Naour's Tents, she order'd that the Sheep should be given to the Cooks to dress, and the Chariots full of the Vessels placed within two Paces of the Tent in which they were to feast. The Can went out to meet the Princess with all the Demonstrations of Joy and Respect of a passionate Lover. He had a long Conversation with her. The Table was spread, and she caused some of the Barrels of Cammez to be brought into the Tent, which she presented to Naour. He drank of this Liquor with much Pleasure, and made himself drunk. Then she gave the Signal to her Attendants, who opening the great Barrels, there came forth instantly arm'd Men, who joining with the rest of the Princess's Attendants, fell upon Naour, whom she had already stabb'd, and cut him in pieces. Nor could their Fury be appeased till they had spilt the Blood of all those Domesticks whom this Can had caused to come into the Tent to serve them. Such was the Vengeance this generous Woman took on her Husband's Enemy. And she concerted her Measures so well to execute her bold Design, that she retreated in Safety, without any discovery being made of what she had done, or falling into the Hands of those who might have reveng'd Naour's Death. By this great Action she acquir'd a mighty Fame, and all the Princes of that Age highly esteem'd her. An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

[s] Some call it Cosmos. It is a Drink made of Mares Milk and prepared after a particular manner.

ing

Mergous Can left two Sons by this Princess, Coja Boiruc and Gurcan; the first of whom dying, left several Children, the eldest of whom was Ounghcan, who was at first called Togrul. At ten Years of Age he accompanied his Father in his Wars. Togrul was in that Expedition where his Grandfather was taken by Naour, and with much difficulty escaped. And having more Merit, and being better belov'd than the rest of his Brothers, they conceiv'd a most inveterate Hatred against him, when they saw him seated on the Throne of the Keraites, which he took possession of after the Death of his and their Father. This Aversion was increased in them, when they saw the King of China send an Ambassador to congratulate him, giving him the Name of Ounghcan, by which he intimated that he merited the Title of Grand Can, and that he acknowledg'd him for such. And in truth this Name, which signify'd the first of Cans, pleased him so much, that he as- Fadlallah, p. 272.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

ſum'd it, and quitted that of Togrul, which he always diſliked, becauſe it was the Name of a certain Bird that was accounted an ill Omen.

Ounghcan had afterwards more than one Quarrel with his Brothers and Couſins, ſome of whom he put to death. This rigorous Treatment of them cauſed his Uncle Gurcan to make war againſt him. They came to Blows in the open Field, where, after a bloody Battel, Ounghcan was vanquiſh'd, and deſpoil'd of all his Dominions: But he had recourſe to Piſouca, Temugin's Father, and by his Aſſiſtance he expell'd his Uncle Gurcan, and purſued him even to the Kingdom of Cachin, and ſo was re-eſtabliſh'd in his Throne.

This ſame Ounghcan, King of the Keraites, was that Prince who made ſo great a Noiſe in the Chriſtian World towards the end of the twelfth Century, [6] under the Title and Quality of the Preſter John of Aſia, which Name the Neſtorians firſt ſtiled him by. And there are yet to be ſeen circular Letters ſent by him to Chriſtian Princes during his Reign; one of which was to Pope Alexander III. one to the King of France, one to the Emperor of Conſtantinople, and one to the King of Portugal, all writ in a very lofty Stile; in which he ſeem'd to deſign to give to thoſe Princes to whom they were addreſſed, an Idea of his Greatneſs, and to perſuade them that he was the greateſt Monarch that ever Aſia produc'd. There is yet remaining in French a Copy of the Letter he writ to King Lewis VII. the Father of Philip Auguſtus; but it ſeems by the Writing not to have been writ above three hundred Matthew Paris.

[6] Ounghcan is the Preſter John of Aſia.

Years

Years, and it begins with these Words, 'Prest- An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.
'ter John, by the Grace of God, the most 'powerful Monarch, King of all Christian 'Kings, wisheth Health, &c.'

This Letter is fill'd with an Account of this Prince's Magnificence: He boasts of his great Wealth, the Vastness of his Dominions, in which he comprehends India, and all the Inhabitants of Gog and Magog: he proudly speaks of seventy Kings, who serve him, and are his Subjects; he vaunts of the Tribute he extorts from an Israelitish King, who is Lord of many Lords, Dukes, and Jewish Princes; he invites the King of France to come and see him, promising to give to him great Dominions, and also to make him his Successor. He proceeds in this Letter to name the different sorts of People and Rarities that are in his Kingdoms. In fine, he omits nothing that may conduce to his advantage, and speak him a most powerful Monarch. He calls himself a Priest, because of the Sacrifice of the Altar, which, as such, he performs; and King, as he executes Justice and Right as sovereign Judge. He speaks of St. Thomas, conformable to the fabulous Notions of the Indians; and at the Conclusion of his Letter, desires the King to send him some valiant Cavalier who is of the French Generation. These are his Words.

The Original of this Letter is in the Author's Hands.

But 'tis not difficult to discover that this Letter is a Counterfeit, and that it was not writ by Ounghcan. The Nestorians who in that Country were very numerous, having established themselves there in the Year 737. by the means of the Missionaries of Mousoul and Basra, were the Authors of this Letter; having by means of their Emissaries spread a Report over all Christendom, that they had converted the greatest teſt Part of the People in Scythia, and alſo the King himſelf, who was the moſt mighty and powerful King that ever reign'd there; that his Converſion was ſo ſincere, that he was become a Prieſt, and had taken the Name of John. They added theſe Circumſtances, to render their fabulous Stories more like Truth; and compos'd theſe vain Letters, to make the Zeal of their Sect more reſpected and commended, by their having gain'd ſo great a Prince to Chriſtianity.

An. Dom. 1170. Heg. 566.

All the uſe we can make of theſe Letters for our Hiſtory, is to prove that the World was at that time perſuaded, and believ'd, that this King was a very great Prince, and likewiſe both a Chriſtian and a Prieſt. There is alſo found a Letter of the Pope's, who ſtiles him a moſt holy Prieſt; yet in reality there is not the leaſt Appearance that he was a Chriſtian, but only that he permitted Chriſtians to live under him, [7] and that ſome of his Subjects had embraced the Chriſtian Religion; nay more, that he even ſuffer'd them quietly to have Biſhops. What is really true, is, that this King was the moſt conſiderable Can of the Kingdom of Caracatay, and that a great number of Sovereign Princes paid him Tribute. Abulfarage obſerves, that he was Sovereign over all the Eaſtern Turks; but we muſt take notice, that in his time the greateſt part of the Tartars were call'd Turks, tho they were not of the Country of Turqueſtan.

Matthew Paris, p. 82. Sacerdotem ſanctiſſimum.

[7] Et vocabant eum Neſtoriani Regem Johannem, & plus dicebant de ipſo in decuplo quam veritas eſſet. Sic ergo exivit magna fama de illo Rege Johanne; & quando ego tranſivi per paſcua ejus, nullus aliquid ſciebat de eo niſi Neſtoriani pauci. Rubruquis.

Ounghcan,

[8] Ounghcan was a Native of the Kingdom of the Keraites, whose Dependants were the Inhabitants of Gelair and Tendouc, which poſſeſs'd the largeſt Countries of Caracatay. The capital City of his Kingdom was Caracorom, ſituate about ten or twelve days Journey from the Place where Temugin firſt kept his Court, and about twenty days Journey from China. [9] This City after Ounghcan's Reign became the Reſidence of the Mogul Emperors. Temugin eſtabliſh'd his Seat there, and his Succeſſors made it the principal City of the Empire. The [1] Emperor Octay Caan, Genghizcan's third Son, cauſed it to be rebuilt after his Expedition into China, and gave it the Name of Ourdoubaleg.

An. Dom. 1174. Heg. 570. Condemir.

Rubruquis.

Abulfarage.

This Digreſſion I thought neceſſary, to prove who Ounghcan was, in whoſe Court Temugin ſought an Aſylum from the Perſecutions of his Neighbours. And now let us return to this Prince. [2] He arrived ſafely at Caracorom, being conducted thither by the Prince Caraſchar, Ann. Dom. 1174. He was then in his twentieth Year. [3] Ounghcan receiv'd him kindly, and gave him all the Marks imaginable of Friendſhip and Affection, acknowledging the grateful Senſe he retain'd of the great Services the deceaſed Piſouca had done him. Temugin treated him with a like Reſpect, and mutual [8] Ounghcan who was the Governour of the Keraite Nation.

---

[9] Ounghcan erat Dominus cujuſdam villulæ quæ dicitur Caracorom, populum habens ſub ſe qui dicebantur Krit, Merkit.

[1] And arrived in his own Country, where he built a City, which he called Ourdoubaleg; and this was the City of Caracorom.

[2] Caracorom ſignifies black Sand.

[3] Temugin comes to the Court of Ounghcan King of the Keraites.

Ci-

An. Dom. 1174. Heg. 570. Civilities paſs'd between them. And, as in all Courts, the Favourites careſs him whom their Maſter reſpects; ſo here the Courtiers all ſtrove to pleaſe and oblige Temugin, whom their Monarch ſtrove daily to do Honour to, and much loved.

Abulfarage. Some Days after his Arrival, Caraſchar deſired Ounghcan to give his Maſter a private Audience, which was granted. [4] Then Caraſchar, being the Prince's Governour, firſt made to the King a full Recital of all the Injuſtice and Perſecutions the Mogul Cans had treated this young Prince his Maſter withal ſince his Father Piſouca's Death; and finiſh'd his Diſcourſe with ſupplicating him to permit him to continue in his Court till he was of years to be able to revenge himſelf upon them. Temugin, after his Governour had ended his Diſcourſe, aſſured the King of his Obedience and Fidelity; adding, that he would entirely devote himſelf to his Service. Ounghcan careſs'd the young Prince, and promiſed him his Protection; and that he would not only make the Mogul Cans ceaſe to perſecute the Tribe of the Teca-Moguls who had always been faithful to him, but that he would force the Tribe of Niron Cayat to return to their Duty: In fine, he treated him with all the Goodneſs that a King could ſhew, nay indeed uſed him as a tender Father would his Son. He added more Officers to his Retinue, and honour'd him highly. He ſent Lords from his own Court to thoſe Cans who were the greateſt Enemies to Temugin, to threaten them in his Name with his Diſpleaſure, declaring war with them if they

[4] He continued in Ounghcan's Service till he was of age.

con-

continued any Hoſtilities againſt Temugin. An. Dom. 1174. Heg. 570.

Caraſchar had indeed much Wiſdom and Judgment, and it was doubtleſs by his ſage Counſel and Inſtructions that the young Mogul Prince came to be ſo ſoon capable of ſuch a great Truſt as he diſcharg'd in Ounghcan's Court, who honour'd him greatly, calling him his Son; nay he even plac'd him above the Princes of his own Blood, and committed the Conduct of his Armies to him in a War he had with the Can of Tendouc. Temugin made his Courage appear on this occaſion; and ſome Mogul Cans refuſing to pay the Tribute they uſually paid to Ounghcan, felt his Valour. He behaved himſelf on all occaſions with ſo much Prudence and Wiſdom, that Ounghcan undertook nothing without firſt conſulting him.

All this good Succeſs, and the Confidence the King had in this young Mogul Prince, ſeem'd to ſecure him his Favour for ever; but his Virtues created him Enemies, even more dangerous than thoſe who forc'd him to fly his Kingdoms.

The Princeſs Ouiſoulougine, Daughter to the King, charm'd with Temugin's Valour and Perſon, fell in love with him, [5] and rejected the Offers of Gemoucha, Can of the Tribe of Jagerat, who had asked her in Marriage with much Earneſtneſs. Ounghcan gave her to Temugin, [6] and this Marriage was celebrated with as much Pomp as if it had been the Grand Can's himſelf. Gemouca could not patiently ſee this; he lov'd the Princeſs, and ſaw himſelf ſlighted

Abulcair, p. 2. l. 3.

Abulcair, p. 21. l. 5.

---

[5] Gemouca was in love with Ouiſoulougine, but ſhe lov'd Temugin.

[6] Genghizcan marries the Princeſs; Gemouca is mad with Rage, and loſes the Grand Can's Favour.

he

An. Dom. 1175. Heg. 571.

and rejected, his Love and Honour both injur'd and affronted: This enraged him so, that he resolv'd to revenge himself first on his Rival, and then on the King of the Keraites.

Marrakeschy, a celebrated Arabian Author, says, 'That the Fire of Envy was kindled in 'the Hearts of those who belong'd to the 'Grand Can, and that they invented deviliſh 'Stratagems to ruin the young Mogul Prince, 'and set the King against him; that they laid 'Snares (like Huntsmen) to entrap him, and 'omitted nothing to break the Union that 'was betwixt the King and him.' These are the Words of Marrakeschy.

Gemouca, now a despairing desperate Lover, easily found People disposed to join with him. A thousand envious Wretches offer'd themselves to assist him in his Revenge: Yet notwithstanding they were all combined against Temugin, and their Impatience great to ruin him, it was many Years before they could bring it to pass. The Credit of this young Prince, whom the King had made his first Minister, the great number of his Friends, and the Services he did Ounghcan, defeated all their Plots and villanous Designs a long time; [7] but the Grand Can, who wanted nothing but a Mind firm and constant, proof against Sycophants Whispers, at last suffer'd himself to be seduc'd with Calumnies: But before he gave ear to Temugin's Enemies, many great Events past.

Conspiracy against Temugin.

Abulfarage.

Toucta Bey, Can of the Merkites, was at the head of those who sought to ruin the Mogul Prince; and seeing that their Designs did not [7] He was valiant, and fear'd of his Enemies, which gain'd him the Envy of his Equals, who did him ill Offices with Ounghcan.

suc-

ſucceed, he broke Friendſhip with Ounghcan, reſolving publickly to make known the Hatred he bore to Temugin. He join'd with the Can of Tanjout, and they made a League together, and had ſo formidable an Army when join'd, that they doubted not of overthrowing both the Father and Son-in-law together. They receiv'd into their Party all that were Enemies to Ounghcan, as well as Temugin; and to make their Friendſhip and League laſting, the Can of Tanjout propoſed to the Confederates, to confirm their Union with a ſolemn Oath, frequent with the Moguls to ſwear on ſuch occaſions. An. Dom. 1177. Heg. 573.

All the Cans and Emirs, or their Deputies, hew'd in pieces with their Sabres, a Horſe, a wild Ox, and a Dog, and then pronounc'd theſe Words:

"Hear, O God! O Heaven! O Earth! "the Oath that we ſwear againſt Ounghcan and "Temugin; If one of us ſpare them when oc- "caſion offers, and fail to keep the Promiſe he "has made to ruin them, and aſſiſt their E- "nemies againſt them, may he become as theſe "Beaſts." The Moguls Oath.

This Oath was a long time kept ſecret; but at laſt the King and the Mogul Prince having been inform'd of all by a Lord of the Congorats, prepared for the War, and to prevent their Enemies. Temugin ask'd to go againſt them in Perſon. The half of the Army was given him. To theſe Forces he join'd his Moguls; and having ſet up his Standard [s], he marched to the Borders of the Tanjouts, of whom he got intelligence by his Scouts, and by his extraordinary

[s] This was a long Staff or Pike, to which a Horſe's Tail was ty'd.

Dili-

An. Dom. 1177. Heg. 573. Diligence surprized their General with his Arrival, who did his utmost to avoid fighting, till such time as some of the Allies Forces, whom he expected, had join'd him; and therefore amused Temugin so long with sometimes sending Parties towards the Mountains, where others were entrenched, or other Stratagems of War, that the Naimans, who being join'd in league with the Cans, were inform'd by their Caraouls. Scouts that the Grand Can had not all his Army with him, took this opportunity, whilst the Mogul Prince was on this Expedition, to enter into the Dominions of the King of the Keraites; and this Enterprize they undertook by the Advice of a younger Brother of Ounghcan's, whose Name was Erkecara, who had many Years before retir'd to the Naimans. Whose King Tayancan, accompanied with this malecontented Prince, briskly attack'd the Grand Can, who thought of nothing less than this Irruption, having the Year before made Peace with the Naimans on very advantageous Terms for them. Tho much surprized, yet he omitted not to oppose them bravely, but in vain; for this unfortunate King, after a tedious Fight, found himself obliged to fly, to avoid falling into the Enemy's Hands. The greatest part of his Soldiers were either kill'd or wounded, the Capital City taken and pillaged; and his Brother Erkecara ascended his Throne as King of the Keraites. The Remainder of his scatter'd Troops, with Prince Sancoun his Son, retired to the Mountains; and Ounghcan, by unfrequented Ways, went to seek his Son-in-law, whom he found just on the point of giving battel to the Tanjouts, and their Confederates.

The Mogul Prince was much amazed when he saw the King in his Camp. He made him many many Compliments of Condolance, and comforted him with Hopes of having now his full Revenge. In order to which, Ounghcan put himself at the Head of the main Body, Temugin commanded the left Wing, and a Keraite Lord the right; and in this order they vigorously attack'd the Tanjouts, who defended themselves obstinately. The Victory was a long time doubtful, but at last the Grand Can was Conqueror; for Temugin, after having animated the Troops, both by his Words, and more by his Example, broke in with such Fury upon the Confederates Troops, that he put their right Wing into disorder. The rest of the King's Army taking fresh courage at this sight, fell in upon them with such Resolution, that they were routed: And so great a Slaughter was made of the Tanjouts that day, that that Nation was almost intirely destroy'd. An. Dom. 1179. Heg. 575.

But this great Victory could not satisfy Ounghcan's Revenge; he must regain his Throne, and punish the rest of his Enemies. He order'd Temugin to levy more Troops. This Prince immediately issued forth his Orders; and by his Care the Year following he had got together a formidable Army of Keraites.

The Confederate Cans were not idle on their side, nor were their Troops less numerous. It is true there were but few Tanjouts; but to make amends, Toucta Bey brought a great number of Merkites with him. There likewise came many Hords[9] of Dirlighin Moguls. The Can of Naiman came in Person at the Head of his Troops, and the Tribes which Erkecara had engaged to his Party considerably augmented his Army.

[9] A Hord is a Tribe of Tartars living together in Tents.

An. Dom. 1179. Heg. 575. They had at first only Skirmishes, and the Van-Guard on both sides fought several times with equal Advantage; but at last, the two Armies seeing each other, ranged themselves in Order of Battel, and Temugin at the Head of his Troops began the Fight. He was immediately follow'd by the whole Army: The Fight was smart and very obstinate, and perhaps the most bloody that History ever recorded. The Leaders of the Enemy at last gave way and fled: Their Example despirited all their Forces, who soon follow'd, and so great a Slaughter was made of them by the Pursuers, that the Fields were all dyed in their Blood. In this dreadful Confusion it was not known what became of Erkecara; but the Grand Can Ounghcan his Brother, enter'd victorious into Caracorom, and was re-establish'd in his Throne An. Dom. 1179.

An. 1180. The Year after this famous Victory, Gemouca, Can of the Jagerats, who was the Author of this War, being still an Enemy to Temugin, and holding a Correspondence with the Confederate Cans, by the Mediation of the Prince Sancoun, obtain'd leave to return to the Grand Can's Court; where he was no sooner arriv'd, but he apply'd himself artfully to gain the Friendship of all those whom Temugin's great Exploits had render'd envious, and who by private Whispers and Practices endeavour'd to lessen his Credit. But he strove above all things to please the Prince Sancoun, who was very young. He easily gain'd his Ear and good Opinion: He represented Temugin to him in the blackest Colours, to render him odious in his Eyes. He did not stop there; he strengthned his Cabal, redoubled his Plots, and spread many Calumnies against the Mogul Prince, Prince, which his Friends ſupported. He fail'd not to find People enough who ſubtly inſpired Prince Sancoun with the Sentiments they deſired againſt Temugin; making him believe he was an ambitious Man, who had no other deſign in view, but to deprive him of the Succeſſion, and get the Crown. To accompliſh which, he held ſecret intelligence with Tayancan, King of the Naimans, whoſe Daughter he had marry'd in his Minority, which King was a known Enemy to his Father the Emperor; and that Temugin built his Hopes on this Can's Aſſiſtance, of whoſe Friendſhip he was well aſſur'd. An. Dom. 1180. Heg. 576.

Theſe Diſcourſes had at laſt the Effect Gemouca deſir'd upon the young Prince, and Temugin paſt in his Opinion for a Traitor. He by many Letters to the Grand Can his Father, advertiſed him of what he had been ſecretly inform'd, and omitted nothing that could render the Mogul Prince ſuſpected. The King at firſt did not regard Sancoun's Advice, but look'd on it as coming from Gemouca's Malice, who had inſpired him with theſe Notions: and without giving ear to it, continued to love Temugin, and to employ him on ſeveral Occaſions where he had need of his Valour or Counſel. But at laſt Sancoun and Gemouca, the one ſpur'd on by Fear, and the other by Hate, redoubled their Efforts, and took ſo much pains, that they broke the King's Peace, and made him jealous of Temugin. The Grand Can's Troops and his being quarter'd together in the ſame Province, the leaſt Motion of the Mogul Troops appear'd to Prince Sancoun treaſonable Deſigns. This young Prince lived in perpetual Diſquiet and Miſtruſt; he daily ſent Couriers with Packets of Letters to his Father, in which he ceaſed An. 1186.

An. Dom. 1192. Heg. 588.

not to adviſe him to be on his guard, and ſaid all that his Imagination or Fears could invent againſt Temugin. Ounghcan was no longer proof againſt his Son's Sollicitations, who conjured him earneſtly to ſecure Temugin's Perſon; yet it was not without much Reluctance that he at laſt conſented to reſolve on ſeizing upon him. For firſt the Love he had for the [7] Princeſs his own Daughter, and next his reflecting on the great Services Temugin had done him, long kept him in ſuſpence, and racked his Soul: but his Love for his Son overcame all; and the Fear of Temugin's wronging him of the Crown when he was dead, as he was made to apprehend he deſign'd to do, made him determine to ſecure his Son-in-law.

---

[7] The Princeſs ſaid to her Father weeping, my Husband is innocent, believe not theſe malicious Tongues. Abulcair.

An. Dom. 1193. Heg. 589.

CHAP. III.

Temugin's Retreat from Ounghcan's Court. His first Combat with his Father-in-Law's Troops. The Moguls refuse to pay Tribute to Ounghcan. Temugin is declared General of the Mogul Army.

WHEN Temugin's Enemies were assured that the King had resolved to seize this Prince's Person, they were overjoy'd; [1] but as it often happens in the Affairs of this world, that the Success does not always answer our Desires, and that Fate often confounds our politick Designs, the Mogul Prince's Affairs took quite another turn than Ounghcan and Gemouca expected.

Bata and Kischelik, two of the King's Slaves, (some Authors say they belong'd to an old Lady of the Court) heard from a Place where they were hid some part of this Conspiracy; but particularly the Resolution the King had taken to arrest Temugin. [2] They hastened to the Hord where this Prince was encamp'd with his Troops by the King's Order, who had sent him from Court under pretence that his Presence was necessary in the Army, but in reality to get him away from his own Guards; for all the Soldiers ador'd the Mogul Prince, both becauſe of the brave Actions he had done in the Field, and his Liberality to them every where elſe, of which they had a grateful Senſe. [3] Theſe two Slaves gave him notice to take care of himſelf; nay, it is ſaid, that they told him the very Day that was fix'd to ſeize him.

[1] Temugin remain'd more than eighteen Years in Ounghcan's Service. Mirconde.

[2] Ounghcan was displeased with two young Men, who fled for Safety to Temugin, who receiv'd them kindly, and hearken'd to them. Marrakeschy.

An. Dom. 1193. Heg. 589.

Tho Temugin could hardly credit what the Slaves told him, yet he did not omit to thank them, and promiſed that on all occaſions wherein he could ſerve them, he would manifeſt his Gratitude for the Affection they had ſhew'd for him. After this, he conſulted Caraſchar, and the reſt of his faithfulleſt Friends, what to do; amongſt whom it was reſolved, that they ſhould not do any thing raſhly, but lie in ambuſcade on their guard, and if any came to attack them, defend themſelves valiantly. And the Slaves aſſuring him it was in his Tent he was to be ſeized, Temugin order'd that all things of value ſhould be remov'd out of it, that the Pavilion and Tents ſhould be left ſtanding, that all his Family and Officers ſhould quit them, and that they ſhould leave Fires burning in the Camp all Night. Then he march'd away with all his Troops, to go and poſſeſs themſelves of a narrow Lane or Paſs.

Temugin's Officers had no ſooner executed his Orders and departed, but Ounghcan's Troops, who had marched all Night, arriv'd. They were far more numerous than Temugin's, and commanded by Sancoun and Gemouca. The [3] They even told him the time when Ounghcan deſign'd to fall upon him. Abulfarage.

Prince

Prince rid full ſpeed up to the Tents which he ſaw ſtanding, and illuminated by the Fires left within ; [9] but the Mogul Prince's Tent he chiefly aim'd at, at which they ſhot a prodigious Quantity of Arrows, not doubting but the Cries of the Wounded would ſoon drive out the Enemy they wanted to find: but they were much ſurprized when they could hear no Voice or Noiſe. They enter'd, and finding no body in that nor the other Tents, they imagin'd Fear had made the Mogul Prince betake himſelf to flight. They reſolv'd to follow him; and looking on him not as an Enemy whom they muſt fight, but as a Man diſmay'd by his own Guilt, who ſtrove to eſcape from them, they follow'd the Track where his Army had gone, and never thought of keeping the Soldiers in their Ranks, who marched in diſorder more like a confuſed multitude of Men and Horſes, than an Army. An. Dom. 1193. Heg. 590.

Mean time, Temugin who was not above two or three Leagues from his Camp, had poſted himſelf at the foot of a Mountain in a narrow Paſs called Germeghah, cover'd by a Wood, with a Brook before him: but when he ſaw his Enemies coming up to him in diſorder, he paſs'd the Brook, and charged them ſo hotly, they had not time to diſcover who they were that aſſaulted them; which increaſed the Diſorder that was already amongſt them, in ſuch a manner, that Ounghcan's Troops, after a very ſlight Reſiſtance, fled before him. In this Fight they loſt a great many Soldiers and Officers. The Prince Sancoun[1] himself was wounded in the Face by an Arrow, and was obliged to save himself, and all those that escaped from Temugin, by flying to Caracorom. This Action happen'd Ann. Dom. 1193. Temugin had not six thousand Men, and 'tis affirm'd that he defeated ten thousand. He was then about forty Years of Age.

[9] They ran and pierced the Tents with their Arrows, but they perceiv'd no body; then they ſent Detachments after him, but they could not find him. Marrakeſchy.

An. Dom. 1193. Heg. 590.

This first Battel was a Presage to him of a great many other Victories. 'When the Divine 'Providence, says an Arabian Poet, throws 'down to thee the Cable of good Fortune, all 'Creatures shall combine to render thee happy, even thy Enemies shall contribute to it; 'and if thou meetest with any Obstacle, For'tune shall take care to remove it." This was what befel the Mogul Prince in the end, those who strove to abase him were the cause of his rising; and it seem'd as if he stood in need of their Hatred and Malice to establish him in his Empire.

Marrakeschi.

If the Grand Can had not suffer'd himself to be pre-possess'd against him, this Prince, who had already lived in his Court nineteen Years, had past the rest of his Life in the Employments and Station he had given him, and had been content with being a Dependant Can under him: but God was determined to make use of him to punish Asia, whose Crimes had arm'd his Vengeance against them.

After this Battel Temugin thought no more of any thing but how to secure himself from any farther Insults, and to open himself a way to the Throne. He strait retired with his Forces near to the Lake Baljouta[2]: There

[1] Sancoun was wounded, and a great number of Keraites kill'd. Mirconde.

[2] Some call it the Fountain of salt Water. Ibid.

He

he call'd together all his Relations and Friends; and the Battel of Germeghah having as it were given a new Luſtre to his Name, all the Malecontents of the Grand Can's Court fail'd not to go and join with him. [3] There daily arrived in his Camp entire Troops of Soldiers, with their Officers, who had before ſerv'd under him, offering him their Lives and Fortunes. An. Dom. 1193. Heg. 590.

When he ſaw that he had an Army ſtrong enough to execute his Deſigns, he quitted the Lake Baljouta, and went and encamp'd on the Frontiers of China, upon the Banks of the River Cacoul [4], at the foot of a very high Mountain. He ſtay'd there ſome Months, which he very well employ'd: for in that time he accompliſh'd his Deſign of bringing all the Officers and Soldiers intirely into his Intereſt; ſome by Promiſes of Rewards, and others, his particular Friends, by the hopes of Advancement: ſo that his whole Army was diſpoſed to follow him wherever he would lead them. Then he decamp'd, and march'd for Mogoliſtan his native Country.

His Subjects the Teca Moguls receiv'd him with Tranſport, as a Prince whom they paſſionately loved, and had loſt with much regret. The Inhabitants of Niron Cayat ſent their Deputies; nay, even ſome of the moſt conſiderable Perſons amongſt them went in Perſon to congratulate him on his Return to his Kingdoms, and offer'd him their Aſſiſtance if he had [3] He retires from the Field of Battel to the Lake Baljouta, which is a ſalt Lake, and has not much Water. Abulcair.

[4] It was alſo called Caramouran, i. e. the yellow River, croceus Fluvius.

occa-

An. Dom. 1194. Heg. 591.

occasion. He thanked them all for their Good-Will, retain'd those whom he thought most sincere, and concerted with them what measures to take to be revenged on his Enemies. [5] It was immediately resolved in his Council, that it should be publickly forbidden in all the Mogul Provinces to pay the customary Tribute to the Grand Can Ounghcan. But before this Order was publish'd, they sounded the People's Temper; and knowing they fear'd Ounghcan's Power, they summoned several Diets, in order to dissipate their Fears. The greatest part of the Persons thus call'd, appear'd. Temugin laid before them the miserable Slavery they had long groan'd under, the Tyranny that was exercised over them, not only by the King of the Keraites, but by his Favourites, to whom they paid intolerable Tribute. He represented to them, That it was in their own power now to deliver themselves from this cruel Yoke; That the Moguls, their Countrymen, who had been his Companions in the late Victory, were sensible that their Persecutor was not invincible; That having at their Head now a Man who had gain'd so many great Victories for Ounghcan their Enemy, they need not doubt but he would conquer for them also who were his Subjects and Friends: To conclude, knowing the Power Religion has over the Peoples Minds, he finished with assuring them that this important Enterprize which he now proposed to them, proceeded not from himself alone, but that the Almighty had inspir'd him with these

Couroultay.

Abulcair, p. 2.

Ibid. p. 3.

[5] He stay'd some time near the Lake Baljouta, then decamped, and went to the Frontiers of China, and there encamped on the Bank of a River at the foot of a Mountain. Mirconde.

Thoughts,

Thoughts, and sent him to deliver them from this heavy Yoke of Slavery. An. Dom. 1195. Heg. 592.

This Speech of Temugin made such an impression on the Peoples Minds, that all the Assembly gave him their Applause, and promised to obey him. When he was thus assur'd of the Good-Will of his Subjects, the Yeca Moguls and Niron Cayats, he raised only four thousand five hundred Soldiers more, whom he join'd to those he already had; and then sent and proposed a League to the Commander of the Congorats, his Brother-in-law, for his Father-in-law the Can of Congorat was dead, whose Daughter Purta Cougine was Temugin's second Wife. With this Prince he made a League, as also with the Cans of the Nation of Courlas; but for those of the Soumoguls, or Tartars, they refus'd to enter into the League, till he constrain'd them to it by force of Arms. The Cans of Mercat, seeing what had happen'd, chose to do freely what he would otherwise compel them to. And several Tribes, after their Example, put themselves under his Command, notwithstanding they were sollicited by some Cans to stand out, particularly those of Merkit, amongst whom Touctabey, the mortal Enemy of Temugin's Family, was the most powerful.

All the Cans of Soumogul, Meroat, Courlas, the Yeca Moguls, Niron Cayat, and some others, caused to be publish'd in their Dominions, that for the time to come, no more Tribute should be paid to Ounghcan, on any Cause or Pretext whatsoever. Pursuant to this Declaration, the People of all those Countries pull'd down the Offices, and drove away the King of the Keraites Receivers, who fled to Caracorom to give the King Advice of this Rebellion. The Moguls refuse to pay Tribute to Ounghcan.

Ounghcan

An. Dom. 1197. Heg. 594.

Ounghcan uſed all the means poſſible to oblige theſe petty Sovereigns to return to their Duty, but he could not gain his ends; and at laſt deſpairing to obtain any thing of them by gentle means, he remitted all ſorts of Tribute, and Impoſitions to the Merkites, who had not revolted from him, and made large Promiſes to Toucta Bey their principal Can, hoping that this Party of the Moguls would ballance the Power of the other.

It is true, Temugin's Cunning and Wiſdom was ſuch, that all the Grand Can's Threats and Promiſes were ineffectual, either to regain or intimidate the People's Hearts; he knew ſo well how to guard his own Frontiers, and thoſe of his Allies, that his Enemies could not penetrate into their Countries. In fine, his Conduct was ſuch, that all the Nations of his Party look'd upon him as their Deliverer. Yet tho he was very deſirous to enter upon Action, he omitted not to counſel the other Cans firſt to ſend an Ambaſſador [6] to Ounghcan, to propoſe an Accommodation, on condition that he ſhould releaſe them from all Taxes, as he had done the Merkites.

All the Cans left the Management of this Affair wholly to him, proteſting they would approve of whatever he ſhould think fit to do. Temugin caſt his Eyes on a Man named Arnijoun (for ſo Fadlallah calls him.) He gave him all neceſſary Inſtructions, and ſent him away with all Diligence; tho perhaps in his Soul he was leſs deſirous of Peace than he appear'd to be by this Action, and rather wiſh'd to be revenged.

[6] They ſend an Ambaſſador, but no Peace was made. Abulcair, p. 4.

So

So soon as this Ambassador arrived at Ounghcan's Court, he desired Audience, and was admitted to the King's Presence; to whom, pursuant to his Orders, he first made a recital of the Services Pisouca had formerly done him: Next he reminded him of his Breach of Faith with Temugin, whom he had promised to protect, and never to hearken or give credit to any that should speak against him, or endeavour to cause distrust between them; and then hinted how contrary to this his Promise, he had given credit to his Enemies, without searching into the Truth of the Matters they laid to his charge, or giving him leave to clear himself. Next he made a particular recital of the great Services Temugin had done him, which were sufficient to secure him of his Love and Fidelity to him. At last, he concluded, with entreating him to grant Peace to the Moguls, and renew the tender Friendship that had so long been between him and his Son-in-law, which he would never have lost, had it not been for his Enemies. An. Dom. 1197. Heg. 594.

Ounghcan gave no answer to the Ambassador, but refer'd the Affair to his Council's Deliberation. Arnijoun retir'd to the Tent which his Attendants had prepared for him; and there the Prince Sancoun's Partizans and Gemouca's Friends treated him basely, and put a thousand Indignities upon him, of which he loudly complain'd, but receiv'd not any Satisfaction. He continued here a whole Year in the utmost Pain and Uneasiness, Ounghcan still putting him off from Month to Month; when he was still promised an Answer to his Proposals, but he never got any. At last he lost all Patience, and sent his Master an Account of all that had past. Temugin sent him express orders to return, turn, after having made one Effort more to oblige the King to explain himſelf.

An. Dom. 1197. Heg. 594.

[7] Ounghcan would willingly have made peace, but the Prince his Son, who ſtill harbour'd in his Breaſt the Suſpicions which Gemouca had infus'd into him, and whoſe Hatred ſeem'd rather augmented by Temugin's defeating him, croſs'd this Negotiation, and hinder'd its coming to a good Effect. For Sancoun was one of thoſe obſtinate Perſons, who when they have taken a thing in their heads to believe or do, are not to be convinced of their Error; and therefore he himſelf carry'd the King's Anſwer, and told the Ambaſſador, that the Moguls muſt not expect to obtain any Peace but by ſubmitting to whatever the King ſhould pleaſe to require of them; that as for Temugin[8], he would neither commune with, nor ſee him, but with their Swords in their Hands.

So haughty an Anſwer obliged the Ambaſſador Arnijoun to retire immediately. He ſoon arrived at Mogoliſtan, and render'd an Account of his Negotiations to the Confederate Princes, who were all ſo diſpleaſed at the Grand Can's Inſolence, that they renew'd their Proteſtations to throw off his Yoke, and promiſed an inviolable Faith to one another, calling Heaven to witneſs their Oaths, and then proceeded to prepare for War. Temugin, tranſported to ſee all things go as he wiſh'd, diſpoſed himſelf to anſwer the Confidence the Allies had placed in him.

---

[7] Ounghcan would really have made peace, but Sancoun oppoſed it with all his might. Mirconde.

[8] Sancoun ſaid, there is betwixt Temugin and me no Reaſon but the Sword. Ibid.

The Year following, being Ann. Dom. 1200. Sancoun, to ſhow that he meant as he ſaid, fail'd not to ſend ſome Troops into Mogoliſtan to ravage the Country, and ſpread a Terror in the Rebels Minds. But his Deſigns were fruſtrated, his Enemies defending themſelves bravely. It is true, this Year they did no great matters on either ſide; nothing conſiderable paſt: nevertheleſs, the Muguls always got the better, and beat every Party that encounter'd them: And Temugin gain'd much Honour by his Conduct. An. Dom. 1200. Heg. 597.

The Grand Can, enraged with the ill Succeſs of his Arms in Mogoliſtan, and being ſtung that theſe petty Princes ſhould be able to reſiſt him ſo long, cauſed Troops to be levied all over his Dominions, and drew together above thirty thouſand Men out of the Provinces of Turqueſtan, Tendouc, and other Places depending on his Kingdom of Gelair. Nevertheleſs, whilſt theſe new Levies were marching to Caracorom, to join thoſe of Caracatay, and other ſtanding Troops, he ſent to ſummon the Moguls to ſurrender before it was too late, threatning to treat them with the utmoſt rigour if they return'd not to their Duty; promiſing, that on the contrary, if they would ſubmit and truſt to his Clemency, they ſhould receive all the Satisfaction they required, and ſo prevent the dire Effects of his Anger, and their own inevitable Ruin.

This Conceſſion of the King of the Keraites was enough to ſhake the Conſtancy of the Confederates; but Temugin diſpatched Meſſengers immediately every way, to perſuade the Moguls that Ounghcan made theſe fine Promiſes only to amuſe and ſurprize them, and that they muſt put no truſt in him. He thought it not enough to represent to them by his Envoys what he had to say to them on this important Subject; but he called an Assembly at Manquerule, whither he invited all the Cans concern'd. So soon as they were met, he inform'd them of what was then doing at Caracorom, shewing them Letters which he had receiv'd from his Correspondents there, and assured them that what they contain'd had been confirmed to him by his Spies, which was, that the Grand Can and his Son had sworn the Ruin of the Confederate Cans, whom they already look'd on as their Slaves and Vassals, and that they were resolv'd to put all to Fire and Sword in the Mogul Countries: They promise us, added he, good Treatment, for no other reason but because they see us with our Swords in our hands, and in a Condition to defend our selves; they wish no other but that we were so foolish as to fear them, or so credulous as to believe them; and then, alas, we were undone. Let us not basely deliver our selves into our Enemy's hands; believe me, let us bravely despise their Threats and Offers, and fear nothing, whilst we continue in a perfect Union amongst our selves.

to

An. Dom. 1200. Heg. 597.

An. 1201.

Some Cans were at first of opinion to accept Ounghcan's Propositions; but others, less timorous, nobly opposed them. And it was at last resolv'd by the whole Assembly, That every Can should bring into the Field as many Men as his Tribe could furnish; that one half of the Troops of the Mercats should remain behind to observe the Merkites, and guard the Frontiers; that the War should be carried on with all imaginable Vigour; and that, in fine, Temugin should be declar'd General of the whole Army.

Jouini in Jehau Kuscha.

Then

Then they immediately presented to this Prince the Topouz [9]; but he would not accept it but on condition that every Man should promise to be entirely obedient to his Orders, and that he should have full Power to punish those who did not do their Duty. They granted him all he ask'd, and then he receiv'd the Staff of Power. [1] After which, every one return'd to his own Country, and thought of nothing but putting their Troops in a condition to take the Field, and march to the general Rendezvous. An. Dom. 1201. Heg. 598.

Tho Temugin had no cause to distrust the Fidelity of his own People, yet to be the more secure of them, and to engage them firmer to his Interest, he gave Largesses to them, and all the rest of his Army. And to shew that he knew how to recompense those that served him, being indebted for his Life to the two Slaves who left Ounghcan's Court, and came to his Camp to give him notice of that King's Designs against him, he in publick acknowledged the Obligation he had to them, gave them the Praises they merited, made them considerable Presents; and to honour them the more, declared them Tercans [2], assign'd them a Revenue for their Maintenance, and exempted them and their Children from all Taxes [3], with a Power to [9] This is a Staff of Authority, a short Truncheon made of a particular Fashion.

[1] It was in the Year 1201. when this Resolution was taken.

[2] It is a Title that is given amongst the Tartars and Moguls to those who have receiv'd of their Prince some great Privileges and Advantages, which distinguishes them from the rest of his Subjects. Marrakeschy.

[3] The Tercan is exempt from all Duties; he divides not his Booty with any body, not even with the Prince's Custo take first of the Plunder that should be gotten in the War. He gave them likewise the Privilege not to be obliged to divide the Booty that they should take with the Prince's Receivers and Officers of the Customs. Besides all these Privileges, he permitted them to enter into his Tent whenever they pleased, without being obliged to ask leave of any of his Officers, and declared them exempt from all Punishment whatever Faults they committed, at least if it were not proved that they had committed a Fault more than nine times. He added to all these Favours, that these Privileges should continue to the Descendants of these two Tercans, even to the seventh Generation, or, according to the Report of some Authors, to the ninth.

An. Dom. 1201. Heg. 598.

But it was not to these Slaves alone that he shew'd his Gratitude; but he loaded with Benefits all those who had left Ounghcan to follow him, and chose out of them all his general Officers, and honour'd them with his Friendship and Places of Trust.

---

tom-Officers; he goes into the King's Presence without asking leave; and is pardon'd nine times, let the Fault be what it will. Abulfarage.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

CHAP. IV.

Ounghcan's War with the Moguls. The Death of that King, and of the Prince his Son. Temugin proclaim'd Emperor of the Moguls, Tartars, and other the Northern Nations of Asia.

TEMUGIN's Behaviour and Liberality to the Slaves, did him great Service; for it gain'd him the Hearts of a great many of the Soldiers. All the Mogul Cans, except those whom Toucta-Bey and Gemouca had prevail'd upon to enter into Ounghcan's Party, admiring his Generosity, grew more zealous to second him in all his Designs. When all the Confederate Troops were come together, Temugin named his Lieutenant Generals and other Officers; and, contrary to the Custom of the Scythians, who used to attack their Enemies in one main Body, he divided his Army into two Wings, and in the Center placed his own Troops as a Body of Reserve; which Custom he ever after continued to use. And considering that Fear often seizes those who are first attack'd, he march'd directly to the Frontiers of the Grand Can's Dominions, where he learn'd that his Army was already in Motion, which he resolved rather to attack than act on the defensive.

Tho the Spring was not yet come, yet the King of the Keraites had already got his Troops into the Field. [4] He made them take long Marches so soon as he was inform'd that Temugin was already on his Borders; but the Baggage being very rich, and the Waggons that belong'd to his Army heavy loaden, and by consequence more troublesom than those of the Moguls, hinder'd their March; for which reason Temugin's Army advanc'd swiftly, and soon arrived at the Place where they design'd to make a stand, and wait the Enemy's coming up. It was in a Plain call'd Tangut, belonging to the Keraites.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

Temugin having learn'd in this Place that the Grand Can was but three Leagues and a half off from him, halted; and to encourage his Soldiers, consulted the Astrologers and Magicians. Marco Polo reports, that this Prince order'd them to try his Fate by [5] Wands, to see which of the two Armies should be victorious.

---

[4] Temugin marches with the Mogul Army, and Ounghcan comes to meet him with a great many Forces. Abulcair.

[5] This Experiment of the Canes was then in use amongst the Tartars, and is still among the Africans, Turks, and other Mahometan Nations. The Cojas, or Registers of their Corsairs or Pirate Ships, commonly try this Trick before they fight; and this is what they call, Do the Book. It is true, that they oftner use Arrows: Two Men sit on the Ground overagainst one another, and hold each of them two Arrows by the Iron Part or Heads; the Ends of the two contrary Arrows are fixed together one in another by the Notches where the Bow-string comes in shooting, so that the four Arrows together make as it were but two Sticks in a parallel Line. Then the Coja reads a certain Arabian Prayer. They pretend that during this Reading, these two pair of Arrows, two of which represent the Christians, the other the Turks, shall approach one another, in spite of those that hold them, and after fighting the one Pair shall get above the other. Thevenot's Travels, lib. 1.

This

This Magical Experiment was perform'd after this manner: [6] The Magicians took a piece of green Cane, which they ſplit in two to make two Sticks, which they ſet upright on the Ground at ſome diſtance from one another, after having writ on the one the Name of Temugin (whom Marcopolo calls Cingis) and on the other Ounghcan (whom he names Umcan;) then they told Temugin they would begin and read their Conjurations, and that during their reading, the two Canes, by the Power of their Idols, ſhould approach near to one another, and begin a Combat; at the Concluſion of which the one ſhould get up upon the other, which ſhould preſage that Prince ſhould be Victor whoſe Name was on the Cane that was uppermoſt. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

The Mogul Army would be witneſs of this Experiment. The Magicians read their Book; the two Sticks were preſently in motion; they approach'd, touch'd and fought, and at laſt Ounghcan's remain'd undermoſt. This Prodigy ſo animated the Moguls and their Commanders, that they march'd boldly againſt the Enemy.

But the Keraites, who were no leſs deſirous of fighting than they, met them half way. The Grand Can, who commanded in Perſon, and the Prince his Son, ſeem'd to promiſe themſelves an entire Victory. The two Armies being come in view of one another in the Plain, ſtrove to place themſelves as advantageouſly as they could on both ſides, and were drawn up in order of Battel by their Generals, according to the beſt of their Skill.

---

[6] Cingis commando alli ſuoi Aſtrologi & Incantatori che doveſſero dire qual eſſercito dovee haver vittoria. Coſtoro preſa una Canna verde, la diviſero in due parti per longo, &c. Marcopolo.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

Mirconde, a Persian Author, desirous to represent the vast number of the Combatants which composed those two mighty Armies, makes use of an oriental Hyperbole, and says, the Neighing of the Horses, and the Cries of the Soldiers, obliged Heaven to shut its Ear; and the Air, by the great number of Arrows they shot against one another, seem'd to be a Field of Canes and Reeds.

Temugin before the Fight harangued his Army once again in this manner: He first talk'd to them of the Value of Liberty, and what a glorious thing it was to be free, and then set before them the Miseries of Slavery: He represented to them, that this was the great Day in which they must make themselves happy or miserable for the rest of their Lives; that therefore they must fight bravely and conquer, or die like Men in the Bed of Honour; that the Grand Can now made them pass for Rebels, and look'd on them as revolted Slaves, but that he hoped, by their obtaining a glorious Victory, they would convince the World of the Wrong that had been done them by their Enemy who had so long usurp'd an Authority over them and their lawful Princes, to which he had no right, and put a Yoke of Slavery on their Necks; which they bravely throwing off, should no longer be his Vassals and Slaves, Names which we scorn longer to bear, and which, said he, our Enemies Blood must wash off from us.

Ounghcan fail'd not likewise to exhort his Troops to fight, by shewing them, first, that their Enemies were not so numerous as they, nor so well disciplin'd and skilful in the Art of War. 'These Rebels, said he, will quickly 'fly before us; they are not hardy Soldiers 'enur'd

'enur'd to War like you.' (This Prince seem'd to have forgot, that Temugin, and the greatest part of those he talk'd of, had often defended him, and were not ignorant in any part of War, or timorous in Fight.) He had made a longer Speech to his Army, if the Moguls had given him time; but the Prince Caraschar, who commanded the Van-Guard of Temugin's Army, attack'd theirs briskly, which was commanded by Gemouca. The Combate was sharp; the personal Hatred betwixt these two Generals render'd it obstinate and bloody, and Caraschar was overthrown. Then Suida Behader, at the head of the old veteran Troops join'd with the Soumoguls, so vigorously charged Ounghcan's main Body, that they gave back; and Gemouca advancing to sustain them, after defeating Caraschar, was obliged also to give ground. At the same time Temugin's two Wings of his Army, the one commanded by Prince Hubbe, and the other by Prince Yrca, attack'd the Enemy's two Wings. It is impossible sufficiently to commend the Bravery the Troops show'd on both sides for the space of three Hours. The Keraites fought with so much Courage, that the Victory often seem'd ready to declare it self on their side; tho in the end the Moguls gain'd it: for Temugin, when he found it was time to advance with his Corps de reserve, where he was with the Princes his Son, fell on with so much Fury, that he overthrew all that opposed him. This Advantage enflam'd the Moguls Courage, and damped the Keraites, who began to give back, and break their Ranks on all sides. Their King, and the Prince his Son, used all their Endeavours to rally them together again, but in vain. At last, they were obliged to betake themselves to flight, after their Army's

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

Example, who being fallen into Confusion, fled before the Enemy, who eagerly pursued them, and made so great a Slaughter amongst them, that all the Fields were strew'd with dead Bodies. This Victory greatly enrich'd the Moguls, who plunder'd the Baggage, and found enough to satisfy their Avarice. They also took abundance of Prisoners, and a great number of Horses.

In fine, this Day, which was fatal to Ounghcan, decided Temugin's Fate, who was then forty eight Years of Age; for it put him into possession of the Kingdom of the Keraites, and all Caracatay: And the vanquish'd King not only lost forty thousand Men kill'd in the Fight, but had the Grief of hearing that all his best Troops which remain'd were gone over to his Enemy. Some Historians report that Ounghcan was kill'd in this Battel; but they are mistaken: It is true, he was wounded in the Fight, which Wound obliged him at last to quit the Command of his Army, designing to retire to Caracorom; but seeing himself pursued by a Troop of Moguls, he saved himself by flying to his Enemy Tayancan, whose Protection he implor'd. His retreating thither was much wonder'd at; every body being amaz'd that he should ask Protection of a Can by whom he was hated, and in a Court where there were several great Naiman Lords whom he had ill used, who fail'd not to relate to their Prince all the Injuries this now fugitive Prince had done their Country; saying, that they supposed his flying thither was a further Proof of his Malice to them, since it could be with no other design but to draw the Victor's Anger upon the Naimans, to occasion their Ruin, and involve them in his own Misfortunes; which he could never bring about about, tho he often attempted it, during his Prosperity. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599.

Mirconde.

Jouiny in Jehankuscha.

Tayancan, who was naturally ungenerous, and had even more Aversion to the Grand Can than those who persuaded him to guard himself against him, gave ear to their Discourses, and follow'd the Counsel they all gave him, to put the Grand Can to death. Thus the Can of the Naimans, instead of succouring this ruined King, which had been far more honourable for him, and perhaps more advantageous, caused him to be seized. The principal Lords of this Court, resolving to take away this unfortunate Prince's Life, held a great Council, at which their Prince took care not to be present; vainly imagining that he should by this means skreen himself from the Reproaches of the other Cans, who might justly blame him for having basely violated the Law of Nations and Hospitality. Nay, he even pretended to be displeased at the Death of his Enemy; but when he saw at his Feet this poor Monarch's Head, which was presented to him, he could not conceal his Joy, nor contain from insulting him, tho dead, in Words full of Scorn and Spite, which an Author much blames in these Words: 'It is a base 'Action, says he [7], to tear or rend off a dead 'Lion's Beard.' The Tongue in the Head was two or three times put out of the Mouth in Tayancan's Presence, moving as the Head lay cut off. At which some Lords who were skill'd in Astrology [8], when the Can asked them whether this surprizing Motion of the Tongue

[7] 'Tis a base Action to rend off the Beard of a dead Lion. Abulcair.

[8] Rubruquis, a French Author, says, that in this Country Astrology was a Science held in great Estimation.

pre-

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. By the Moguls Account the Year of the Hog.

preſaged any ill to him or his Kingdom, anſwer'd, It was their opinion it preſaged that Temugin ſhould one Day govern the Naimans, if good Care was not forthwith taken to prevent it.

Sancoun accompany'd the King his Father to the Borders of the Naimans; but fearing to hazard both their Perſons in one Place, he parted from him, and retired in diſguiſe ſecretly to Caracatay, where he lay conceal'd ſome time, and waited to hear News of his Father: But when he was inform'd of his unfortunate Death, he fled farther off, croſſing Turqueſtan, and ſtopp'd not till he came to the Kingdom of Tebet, where he liv'd unknown.

The Kingdom of Tebet, of which no doubt but the Reader will be glad to know ſome particular Account, is ſituated between thirty and forty Degrees of Latitude, and between a hundred and a hundred and ten Degrees of Longitude, according to the Situation, given it by the Eaſtern Geographers [9]. It contains part of the Region called Turc-Hinde, becauſe it is a part of Turqueſtan on the one ſide, and of India on the other. Some divide it into two Parts, calling it the Great and Leſſer Tebet. The Great borders on China, the Leſs is ſituate to the Eaſt of the little Kingdom of Kaſchemire, juſt behind the Mountains; and they are both but ſix Weeks Journey over. This Country is full of Towns and Villages well inhabited; the People are ſo good humour'd and chearful, that they breathe nothing but Joy and Pleaſure.

[9] Tebet is a great Country whoſe Capital City bears its Name. It is ſituate between Coraſſana and China, and a part of India. It makes part of the Country of the Turks. Ebn Alouardi's Geography.

But

But what is most surprizing, is, that there is a Mountain called Jabal Assumoum[1], which inspires all those with Melancholy who come near enough but to smell it, nay, even turns their Tongues black, in such a manner, that they remain black all the rest of their Lives. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

'Tis from this Country that red Sulphur is brought, and the finest Tyger-Skins, as also that excellent Musk that is generally called, The Musk of Tebet. It is taken from a [2] Creature much like a wild Goat, and yet in something resembling a Hog. But in a City call'd Schage, there is a sort of Rat [3] whose Navel produces such precious Musk, that it surpasses all other. It is very much sought after, is often very scarce, and generally very dear; and this is the reason that the Tebet Musk is always prefer'd before the Indian and Chinese. Here is also found much Civet; and the Rhubarb that grows here is extremely valued.

The Women are handsome tho tawney, and they have one particular Quality which many People would not dislike, that is, to steal Children from one another to sell, and their Husbands do the same. It is in this Country that the Maids cannot marry before they have had Commerce with some Man; and she who has had the most Lovers is the most advantageously marry'd. The great number of Gallants passes for a Mark of the Merit and fine Qualifications of a Maid; and the Husband values her according to the Presents she has receiv'd from her Lovers, which he looks on as her Portion.

[1] That is to say, the Mount of Poison.
[2] Named in the Arabian Tongue Dabat Almisc.
[3] Called Farat Almisc.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

tion. Their being thus proſtituted while ſingle, does not render them vicious after Marriage; but, on the contrary, it ſeems that they become more chaſte for being debauch'd, it being very rare to find one who is not faithful and true to her Husband.

But to return to Sancoun: This Prince, after having lived ſome time in the Kingdom of Tebet, return'd to Turqueſtan, and ſtaid in the City of Caſchgar, or Caſgar [4], where he lived, as he had done elſewhere, without diſcovering himſelf to any body. But one Day, having obſerv'd ſome Moguls, whom he had ſeen at Caracoron in Temugin's Train, he imagin'd they were Spies come to ſeek after him; and fearing to be taken, he ſpeedily return'd into the Kingdom of Tebet, where he had no better Fortune than Ounghcan his Father; for being ſeized for a Spy, he was put to death, An. Dom. 1202.

Temugin was no ſooner inform'd of Ounghcan's Death, but without loſs of time he continued to ſeize the Grand Can's Dominions as his Right by Conqueſt; and thus he ſoon became Maſter of all his Treaſures and Palaces. And Sancoun being no where to be found, he remain'd the peaceable Poſſeſſor of all the Keraites Countries. The neighbouring Princes who fear'd Ounghcan becauſe he was more potent than they, ſaw with Joy the War the Moguls waged againſt him, hoping that it might diminiſh his Forces, and weaken his Power; but they little thought his Crown and Kingdoms would all fall entirely into Temugin's hands:

[4] The Town from whence the Swedes took their Original, according to M. Sparvenfeld, a Swede.

Hands: And thus their Fear did not ceaſe, but changed its Object. An. Dom. 1202.

It was about the End of the Year 1202. that this Prince, being forty nine Years of Age, retired into his own Country; where he was receiv'd with the Acclamations, not of his own People and Subjects only, but of all the Confederate Moguls who had been Sharers in this Victory, or becauſe of this his Succeſs were obliged to come and teſtify their Acknowledgments to him, believing they could never be thankful enough to him for having deliver'd them all from Ounghcan's Tyranny, whom they call'd the Perſecutor of their Nation; and charm'd with Temugin's Valour, Wiſdom, and Love to them, they prais'd him to the Skies. He fail'd not to make advantage of this Opportunity ſo propitious to his Deſigns. He again uſed his Eloquence, the Power of which he had experienced, and promiſed the Moguls great Fortunes if they would but zealouſly ſecond him in what he deſired. The People, gain'd by his Rhetorick, and by the great things their Countrymen and Friends who had accompanied him in the War related of him every where, reſolv'd to chuſe him their Grand Can or Cham, that is to ſay, Emperor of all the Tribes. The Cans who had been the Companions of his Victory, finding their Account in advancing him to this great Dignity, animated the other Cans to follow their Example. The Preſents Temugin made them, under pretence of dividing with them the Riches of the vanquiſh'd King, and the Fear of being forced to do what was pretended to be neceſſary for the Honour and Welfare of the Mogul Nations, made them all yield, with a ſeeming Willingneſs, Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

Temugin is raised to the Throne.

neſs, to Temugin's Requeſt, and agree to his being Emperor.

Meſſengers were diſpatch'd to the abſent Cans, to acquaint them with what had been reſolv'd in the great Aſſembly that was held for this purpoſe. The Coronation of this Prince was then agreed on; and they thought no Place ſo proper to perform this Ceremony in as the Province of Yeca-Mogul, at Dilon Ildac, where Temugin was born. The People run from all Parts to be Eye-witneſſes of this great Ceremony, where the principal Actor ſoon came, accompanied by all the Cans his Partizans. He placed himſelf upon a plain Seat, which they had ſet for him upon an Eminence, from whence he harangued the Aſſembly with his uſual Eloquence. His Speech being ended, they placed him upon a black Felt Carpet, which they had ſpread on the Ground; and the Perſon who was order'd to give the Peoples Voice, pronounc'd to him aloud the Peoples Pleaſure in this manner: Firſt he told him, That whatever Authority or Power he had given him, was derived from Heaven, and that God would not fail to bleſs and proſper his Deſigns if he govern'd his Subjects well and juſtly; but that, on the contrary, he would render himſelf miſerable if he abuſed that Power, which the black Felt on which he ſat did intimate to him. After this Remonſtrance, ſeven Cans, or Princes, lifted him up with a ceremonious Air, and bare him to the Throne which was prepar'd for him in the midſt of the Aſſembly. Then they proclaim'd him Emperor, and gave him the Title of Grand Can, or Cham, of all the Mogul Nations, even of the Merkites, whom they declared Rebels for not ſubmitting to him. Then they bow'd their knees nine times before this their new Emperor, to shew the Obedience they promised to him. The People, after their Example, made him nine Bows, accompanied with Acclamations and Shouts of Joy, to assure their new Emperor that they would absolutely submit, and be obedient in all things whatsoever he should command them to do. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

He promised, on his part, to govern them with as much Justice as Mercy, and to defend them against all their Enemies, always to procure their Good and Ease, to acquire Glory and Fame for them, and make their Names known to all the Earth. And having much cause to praise the Soumoguls (who are particularly called Tartars [7], by reason of the River Tata that waters their Country) he declared in the Mogul Language, that he would add to his Title of Emperor of the Moguls that of Grand Cham of the Tartars, both to do that Nation Honour, and testify to them the Respect he had for them, and how well he was satisfy'd with their Conduct tho they had been once his Enemies.

---

[7] 'Tis from hence that the several Scythian Nations who became Subjects to Temugin were by degrees called by a general Name, either Moguls or Tartars; but the last Name having in the end prevail'd, all Scythia is now called Tartary, both in the West and Southern Parts of Asia.

It is true, the Name Tata, or Tatar, was not altogether unknown in the East and North. It was of long standing amongst the Chinese. Before the Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and for some time after, they had had War with a Nation who was not known to them but by the Name of Tata. These were, without question, the Soumoguls, and some other Nations; for the Name of Tartars was not known in any other Country before Genghizcan's time.

It must be observ'd, that the Chinese have no r in their Alphabet, they therefore pronounce Tata instead of Tartar.

This

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

This Ceremony was perform'd during the Reign of Philip Auguſtus King of France; and was no ſooner over, but the Grand Can diſtributed Preſents, firſt to the great People, and then more Largeſſes to the Populace, to ſhow his Liberality. He continued the Feſtival of his Coronation by magnificent Treats, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Nations, many Days; and after they were ended, and he had in particular made merry with his Friends, he diſmiſs'd the People, and thanking his Friends, teſtified the grateful Senſe he had of their Love and Services to him, and aſſured them of his future Favour and Protection.

Whilſt this was tranſacting, a Brother of Ounghcan came to offer his Service to Temugin, and his Daughter in Marriage. This Prince was called Hakembou. The Grand Can receiv'd him favourably, and after having ſpoken handſomly of the deceaſed King of the Keraites, this Prince's Brother, he gave him the Employ he deſired, and accepted of his Daughter with Joy, proteſting that he would always have for her and him much Reſpect. I owe you, ſaid he, a kind Treatment, in acknowledgment of that kind Reception your Brother gave me, and the Affection he ſhow'd for me in my Misfortunes. In truth, tho I never gave him any juſt Cauſe to be angry with me, or in any kind offended or wrong'd Prince Sancoun his Son, but, on the contrary, did them many conſiderable Services, yet they conſpired againſt my Life, and looked on me as the greateſt of their Enemies; yet I never blamed them, but imputed all their Perſecutions of me to Gemouca. Their Hatred to me was his Work alone, and I have not a Jot the leſs Reſpect for their Memories, tho they ſought my Life, than if they had continued always my Friends. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

The Keraite Prince thanked Temugin for his Favours, and took leave, setting out with all Diligence to go where his Employ demanded his Presence. The Grand Can fully design'd to marry his Daughter; but perceiving that the Captain of his Guard, whom he much esteem'd and honour'd with his Friendship, was fallen in love with this Princess, he gave her to him in Marriage, and the Marriage-Feast was kept at his Expence, with much Splendour.

Seeing himself Emperor of so many Nations, he thought less of enjoying peaceably his new Greatness, and tasting the Pleasures of Empire in Repose, than of rendring himself still more worthy of his good Fortune, by new Exploits. His Enemies, jealous of his Greatness, soon furnished him with the Opportunities he wanted to aggrandize himself and People. The first Commotion was in Caracatay. But before I proceed to relate these Wars, it is necessary that I speak a few words of Caracatay.

The Description of the Country of Caracatay.

'Tis a large Country that extends it self from the South to the North from the Chinese Wall even to the antient Mogoliſtan [8]. It is bounded on the West by Mount Imaus, and on the East by the Ocean and China. It is divided amongst several Princes, and inhabited by several different Nations or sorts of People. It contains the Kingdoms of Tangut, the Naimans, and many others. [9] Some European Geogra-

[8] Called in the Mogul Tongue Ancou or Avencouh.

[9] Some Geographers will have it that even the Calmucks Country and the Kingdom of Courge, which is the Corea, is a part of it; and Caracatay is also called Khita or Khoutan by the Orientals.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

phers have taken it for Cathay, but were deceived for want of knowing that Cathay was China itſelf.

The Name of Caracatay was given to the Country of Scythia after a furious War which the Scythians had with the Chineſe. The Scythians had at the beginning of this War the Advantage of the Chineſe, and being puffed up with this good Succeſs, enter'd the Kingdom of China; but having loſt one conſiderable Battel, they were obliged to retire, and return back to their own Country. The King of China, reſolving not to loſe the Advantage this Victory had given him, cauſed them to be purſued by two of his Generals [1], who entirely routed and brought them under his Obedience. He did yet more; for fearing leſt the Scythians ſhould revolt, he made theſe two Generals who had beat them, Cans, or Governours, over them: and they, by his Command, built Forts and ſtrong Towns for Colonies of Chineſe Troops, which he ſent thither to awe them. Theſe Forces, deſtin'd to guard the Country, held the People long in ſubjection; but by degrees their Deſcendents forgot the Chineſe Cuſtoms, and uſing to live as the Scythians, became Scythians themſelves: And in the end China had no greater Enemies than they.

When the King of China eſtabliſhed theſe two Generals in the ſandy Scythia, he gave it the Name of Caracatay, alluding to the Name of his own Country Cathay [2]; and to ſignify the Conqueſt he had made, and ſhow it was an

[1] Theſe Generals were named Quimping and Quincing.

[2] Conquerors are uſed to do ſo; and our Kings have always comprehended under the Name of France the Countries they have ſubdued.

acqui-

acquired Dominion, he added the Epithet Cara, a Word used by the Tartars and Turks to signify black, to distinguish these two Countries from one another: yet in time they have been confounded by People who did not consider the Epithet Cara, which makes the Difference betwixt the two Countries, and that Caracatay is barren and unpleasant, and, on the contrary, Cathay, that is, China, is a fine Country, fruitful, and filled with all sorts of good things.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

CHAP. V.

The Moguls War against the Can of the Naimans. Temugin's Expedition against Toucta-Bey, Can of the Merkites. Regulations of the Mogul Army.

Tayancan Prince of the Naimans[4], one of the most considerable Princes of Caracatay, and Father-in-law to Temugin, was astonished at his Son-in-law's Greatness and good Fortune; which gave him some disquiet, notwithstanding the Union and good Understanding there had been of long time between them. And the same Man who had been the Cause of the King of the Keraites Ruin, perswaded Tayancan to declare war against the new Emperor.

[4] These Naimans were the People whom the Antients call'd the Issedon-Scythians, and their Capital City is Issedon in Scythia, to which the Moderns have given the Name of Succuir.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

[5] Gemouca, a Prince of the Tribe of Jagerat, after the Battel was fought in the Plain of Tangut, having fled with the rest, thought he could not secure himself any way so well as to offer his Service to the Can of the Naimans, tho he had heard of the Death of Ounghcan the King of the Keraites. Tayancan, who knew him by Report to be a Man of great Abilities, accepted his Offers. Gemouca having gather'd as much of the scatter'd Remains of Ounghcan's Army as he could meet with, repair'd to Tayancan's Court, where he arrived attended by a tolerable number of good Soldiers and almost all the Officers that had escaped the Enemy's Hands. The Can received him very well, and promised him and his Friends Employments suitable to their Merits. Gemouca, who had a very subtle Wit, and was well skill'd in all the Arts of Courts, soon gain'd so great an Ascendant over Tayancan, that he could perswade him into doing any thing he counsell'd him to, and so prevail'd easily upon him to make war with the new Mogul Emperor, whom he boasted he knew perfectly, having long convers'd with, and studied him. He is, said he, a Man of an unbounded Ambition, and has no other view but to ruin all Princes, and quarrels with them on purpose to invade their Dominions. Nor had he quarrel'd with the Emperor Oungh-can and Prince Sancoun, but because he is one of the most ungrateful and perfidious of all Men living: And at the same time that he was loaded with their Favours, and possess'd the Honour of their Alliance and Affection, he meditated on nothing but the horrible Design of depriving them both of their Empire and Lives. An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

[5] Temugin's old Rival Gemouca went to Tayancan. It is necessary, says he, that Friends should join to attack an Enemy. Abulcair.

them

Tho this Discourse was nothing but pure Calumny and Falshood, and that Tayancan was not ignorant that he who spoke it was a deceitful Sycophant, yet he gave ear to him. The great Power Temugin had over the Moguls, the Conquests he had made of several Provinces of Caracatay, and his being so near him, and so powerful, render'd him uneasy; but above all, Temugin's warlike Disposition, and his continual exercising his Troops, made Tayancan think him dangerous. Thus, less seduced by Gemouca's Sollicitations than by his own Fears and Jealousies, he took up a resolution to go to war with him. For this effect, he ask'd the Assistance of some other Princes, whose Interest it was to put a stop to the new Emperor's growing Greatness. He sent Ambassadors to Toucta-Bey, and other Cans of the Merkites, who desired no better than to join with him. The Can of Ouyrat, and the Can of Kerit, who was a Relation of Ounghcan, enter'd into this League; and Gemouca engaged the whole Nation of the Jagerats, who soon sent him all their Troops.

Temugin, on the other hand, was inform'd of these Practices by his Correspondents and Spies, and even by Alacou Can of the Tribe of Carluc, luc,[6], who sent him word that Tayancan had proposed to him to join their Forces together. A Relation of Alacou carried Temugin the very Letter the Naiman Can had writ, in which were contain'd all the Particulars of the Conspiracy, and the Names of the Cans beforementioned who were engaged in it.

An. Dom. 1202. Heg. 599. Mog. The Hog.

The Emperor of the Moguls, on this Advice, conven'd his Council, which was composed of his Uncle Utegekin, the Prince Caraschar, and some other Persons; he also would have his own eldest Son Prince Jougi, otherwise called Touschy, assist at the said Council. He had no sooner made known to them the wicked Intentions of the Can of the Naimans, but War was resolved on. Then the Grand Can's Orders were sent to all Parts to his Officers, and new Levies were made. It was in the beginning
An. 1203. of the Year 1203. that his Army was called together. So soon as the Emperor arrived, his Tents were set up, and he assign'd the Command of each Troop to such Officers as he thought proper, to whom he gave his Orders.

Then he sent Prince Cubla and Prince Hubbe with their Troops, to discover the Enemies. These two Captains went as far as the Banks of the River Altay, where they learn'd by some Prisoners whom they took in their March, the State of the Enemies: They informed them that Tayancan was preparing to come into the Field; that the Troops of Merkit, Kerit, Ouyrat, and Jagerat, were already come to the [6] Condemir says that this Prince was a great Astrologer, and that he had by his Skill discover'd that Temugin's Planet was turn'd towards the Zenith of Glory, and that on the contrary, Tayancan's declined towards the Nadir of Humiliation.

---

Nai-

Naiman's Camp; that Gemouca was to command one part of them; and, that it was reported in Tayancan's Army, that he design'd to meet and fight the Moguls. Cubla and Hubbe being inform'd of all they wanted to know, return'd back with their Troops to the Frontiers, and sent the Emperor word of all they had learn'd. And waiting his Answer and Orders, they intrenched themselves in an advantageous Post; because being far from the main Body of the Army, they fear'd being surprized: yet they often ventur'd to go forth of their Intrenchments to make Inroads into the Enemy's Country. An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 600. Mog. The Mouse.

However, all that was told these Captains was not true; for Tayancan, following the Advice of his Council, far from going to seek out Temugin, waited his coming. He thought he ought to hearten up his Troops by Rest, rather than tire them with long Marches. He was persuaded that his Son-in law would not fail to come and attack him; and he flatter'd himself that Temugin's Army, after having travel'd so vast a way as the Moguls must necessarily do, and thro the Scarcity of Victuals they must suffer in the Deserts they must pass thro, would easily be overcome by an Army, fresh and in full strength.

One part of what Tayancan imagined came to pass; for Temugin coming up with the main Army, join'd the Troops on the Frontiers which he had sent before. There he stay'd, and refresh'd his Soldiers as well as the Place would permit; and then quitting his own Country, he march'd in good order to the Banks of the River Altay; and no Troops appearing to dispute the Passage over it, he was much surprized, because he did not expect to cross it without Oppoſition. It is certain, he muſt have ſuffer'd much if any had reſiſted, tho ever ſo few. But Tayancan, altho Gemouca, whom he had made his Lieutenant General, repreſented to him that it was much better to prevent and meet the Enemy, than to wait their coming; that in ſo doing he would prevent the Moguls ravaging his Country; that his Soldiers not being ſo well train'd to War, or ſo hardy as Temugin's, ſhould be led farther off from their own Country, leſt the Conveniency of retreating, in a Place ſo well known to them, ſhould render them more cowardly and apt to fly: Tayancan, as I ſaid, inſtead of hearkening to his Advice, or making advantage of the Moguls Wearineſs, by giving them no time to recover, flatter'd himſelf that their Horſe was by this time in a bad Condition, and the farther they came, the leſs able they would be to fight; and on the contrary, his Troops being in full ſtrength, would eaſily get the Victory: and ſo ſtaid in the Heart of his Country expecting Temugin, who ſoon arrived.

An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 600. Mog. The Mouse.

This Emperor's Army was neither ſo fatigued or ill fed as his Father-in-law imagined, becauſe he had taken care to provide good ſtore of dry'd Fleſh, to ſerve when the freſh Meat fail'd; beſides which, the Officers and great Men had all made Proviſion of Cammez [7], and the meaner Perſons, Goats Milk dreſs'd and harden'd [8]; they had alſo bought abun-

[7] Mares Milk.

[8] This boil'd Milk ſerves the Tartars for ſeveral Uſes in their need. They make a ſort of Pottage with it; they put it into a little Barrel with Water, and tie it under their Horſes Belly, whoſe jogging on makes the hard Milk diſſolve in the Water, and ſo they eat it without any other dreſſing.

dance

dance of Forage in those Countries that had Plenty: In fine, the Imprudence of Tayancan gave time to the Moguls to recover their Fatigue, and well recruit themselves. Tayancan contented himself with sending out Scouts to discover them, when they were near at hand; and when he heard they were coming towards him, and some experienced Captains whom he had sent to view them, convinc'd him how formidable the Enemy was, he began to repent that he had not follow'd Gemouca's Counsel. An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 600. Mog. The Mouse.

The Can of the Tribe of Jagerat, tho he saw too well that Tayancan had committed a great Fault in despising his Advice, yet show'd not the least Discontent, nor appear'd less zealous for the common Cause. He harangued his Officers, speaking to them of Temugin's vast Ambition that excited him to endeavour to reign over all the Cans; as also, that they should reflect how he had already got possession of the greatest part of the Mogul Nations, and many Tribes of the Country of Caracatay: at last he concluded with exhorting them to fight valiantly for their Liberty.

Battel betwixt the Moguls and Naimans.

When the Armies were in sight of one another, and ranged in Order of Battel, Prince Jougi, and one of his Uncles, began the Fight, charging Tayancan's Army with much Vigour; but Cachluc, Tayancan's Son, sustain'd the Shock with such Courage and Resolution, that his Troops gave no ground. These two young Princes, whom the Love of Glory equally enflamed, used all their Endeavours to show that neither would yield Precedency to the other, either in Skill or Valour. The mutual Resistance the Van-Guards made on both sides, enengaged by little and little the other Corps, and both Armies came to blows.

An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 600. Mog. The Mouse.

[9] The Fight lasted from the rising to the setting of the Sun, and was as bloody as obstinate. Tayancan perform'd all the Parts of a good General; and Gemouca, spur'd on by the particular Hatred he bore the Grand Can, signalized himself by a thousand heroick Actions: But Temugin seem'd to have Victory at his beck. The Moguls fought with such Rage and Boldness, that at last they broke the Enemies Ranks, put them to flight, and made terrible slaughter of them. [1] Tayancan was wounded mortally, and died soon after of his Wounds. Cachluc his Son, and Toucta-Bey, fled with all those that scaped out of the Moguls hands. As for Gemouca, his Rage made him venture too far, for he was taken Prisoner; and after the Battel his Head was struck off, he being look'd on as the principal Cause of all the Bloodshed and Miseries of this War.

The Death of Gemouca, Temugin's Enemy.

After this happy Success, the Kingdom of the Vanquish'd became a Prey to the Conqueror, who brought under his Obedience a vast Tract of Land. [2] The War thus finished, Temugin return'd to Caracorom, where, during the Winter, his Court was filled with Ambassadors, some of whom were sent to congratulate him on his Victories, and others to ask his Protec-

---

[9] The Furnace of the Fight continued glowing from Morning till Evening, says Condemir.

[1] Tayancan was kill'd, Cachluc flies, as also the Moguls of Merkit, Ouyrat, and Jagerat. Abulcair, p. 7.

[2] After the gaining this famous Victory, Temugin reduc'd to his Obedience the greatest part of the Mogul People, whom he brought into Subjection by his victorious Sword. Condemir, (who places this Event in the Year 1205, but that cannot be.)

tion,

tion, or to offer ſubmiſſive Terms to him from their Maſters. An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 600. Mog. The Mouſe.

Almoſt all the Calmuck Tribes in the Eaſtern Parts put themſelves under his Protection; but on the North ſome Tribes remain'd, whoſe Cans, jealous of their Liberty, refuſed to ask his Favour; and ſome Mogul Tribes who were fartheſt out of Temugin's reach, follow'd their Example. Toucta-Bey ſtrove all he could to foment their Hatred againſt the Emperor. He having once been very great, and a powerful Prince in Mogoliſtan, could not bear to ſee the ſudden Greatneſs of the new Emperor, who was but a Mogul Subject once as well as he; and therefore Toucta-Bey was not one of the laſt who join'd Tayancan. Temugin alſo looking on him as his worſt Enemy, reſolv'd to turn his Arms againſt him; not out of diſlike only, but becauſe this Can had ſo highly injured him, that he had a juſt pretext to finiſh his Conqueſt of Mogoliſtan.

He paſt the Winter in regulating the Affairs of thoſe Countries he had conquer'd; and after having given Orders to his Generals to put his Troops in a readineſs to march againſt the Tribes of Merkit, who were now join'd by ſome Tanjouts, and Prince Cachluc Tayancan's Son, he ſet out in the beginning of the Spring of the Year 1204. at the head of a powerful Army. An. 1204.

[3] Toucta-Bey was not inſenſible what Thoughts and Reſentments Temugin muſt have of his Conduct; yet flattering himſelf that notwithſtanding the ill Fortune he had had, he ſhould one time or other be more succesful, was not unprovided, but also made great Preparations for War: Yet when he heard that his imperious Enemy approach'd his Capital City Cachin with so great an Army, the like of which was never seen before in Mogoliſtan, his Heart failed, and he with his eldeſt Son fled [4] to Boiruc, Tayancan's Brother, to whom Cachluc was already fled for ſhelter. The Grand Can by this means found none to oppoſe him but ſome Fugitives who were flying from the Danger.

[3] It was the time of the Year when Day and Night were equal, that Temugin, with an Army like a rolling Sea, marched againſt Toucta-Bey the Can of the Merkites. Condemir.

time

An. Dom. 1204. Heg. 601. Mog. The Ox.

[5] The City of Cachin endeavour'd to make ſome defence, and ſeem'd reſolved to ſtand a long Siege; but notwithſtanding they made a vigorous Reſiſtance at firſt, yet they were in a little time obliged to ſurrender, and Temugin put all to the Sword who had oppoſed him. After which he made an Oath of Fidelity to be adminiſter'd, not only to thoſe to whom he committed the Charge of the Fortreſs, and all the Tribe of Cachin, but even to all others of the People who were of the Tribe of the Merkits; and all the Cans whom he pardon'd, ſwore to obey him.

After having given all neceſſary Orders in the Merkits Country, his new acquired Dominions, he return'd to his Capital; where he was no ſooner arrived, but having conſider'd the vaſt number of his Conqueſts, he judged it proper to prevent Diſorder and Confuſion, by [4] In the Spring Genghizcan marched againſt Toucta-Bey, who did not ſtay his coming to him, but fled to Boiruc. Abulcair, p. 7.

---

[5] When he came before Cachin, he beſieged the Caſtle, and having taken it in a ſhort time, he razed it, and put all thoſe to the Sword who reſiſted him. Mirconde.

re-

regulating his Empire. For this Cauſe [6] he called a general Diet, which he order'd to be held on Nourouz, that is to ſay, the firſt Day of the Spring of the Year 1205. the ſame Day that the Sun enters into Aries. He ſent Meſſengers to the Princes his Sons who were far off, and to the other Princes of the Blood; he alſo ſent to the Cans, Emirs, and all the great Officers to whom he had given the Government of the Countries he had conquer'd, and, in fine, to all the great Lords, either Moguls or Tartars. An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

In the mean time, not to continue idle, he reſolved to eſtabliſh good Orders in the Army which he had with him. He divided the Soldiers into ſeveral Tomans [7]; at the Head of each Toman he placed a chief Officer or General, under whom he appointed ten Officers, who each commanded a Hezare [8]; and every one of theſe ten Officers had ten other Officers under him, each of theſe commanded a Sede [9]; and the Centurion had under him ten leſſer Officers, each of which commanded a Dehe [1]. The Generals of theſe Tomans were to act under the Command of ſome one of the Grand Can's Sons. [2] This was the manner in which Temugin divided his Troops into Corps; after which, he diſpoſed of theſe Employments to ſuch Men as were moſt capable [6] He called a Diet in the Winter, and early in the Spring Genghizcan aſcended the Throne. Abulcair.

[7] Theſe were Corps or Battalions of ten thouſand Men.

[8] A Regiment of a thouſand Men.

[9] A Company of a hundred Men.

[1] A little Body of Soldiers compoſed of ten Men.

[2] He divided the Troops that had ſerved him againſt Ounghcan into Tomans, Hezares, Sedes, and Dehes, and made theſe Employments hereditary to the Sons of every Officer. Mirconde.

and

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

and worthy of them. Then he consider'd maturely of making new Laws, of which a Memorial was by his order drawn up, which he communicated to his Privy-Council, before he exposed it to the General Diet.

CHAP. VI.

The Description of the General Diet of the Moguls, called in their Language Couriltay. The Establishment of the Yassa, that is to say, the Mogul Laws. Temugin changes his Name for that of Genghizcan.

WHEN the Princes of the Blood [3], the Nevians, Cans, Emirs, and other Lords who were to compose the General Diet, were arrived at the Place the Mogul Emperor had appointed, and that the first Day of the Spring was come, they dress themselves all in white. The Grand Can dress like the rest, came to the Assembly. Then he sat down upon his Throne in the midst of the Princes of the Blood, with his Crown upon his Head, all the Cans and other Lords [4] wishing the Continuation of his Prosperity and Health, which was follow'd with Shouts of Joy, and loud Acclamations of all the People who were present at the Assembly. After which, not contented to confirm the Mogul Empire alone to him and his Succeſſors, they added all thoſe Kingdoms and Nations he had ſubdued, and declared even all the Deſcendents of thoſe vanquiſhed Princes deprived of all Right or Title to any of thoſe Dominions. [5] When he had thanked them all for the Marks of Love and Reſpect they ſhow'd him, being ſenſible that the chief Duty of a Prince is to eſtabliſh good Laws, he declared to them that he thought to add to the antient Laws of the Land ſome new ones which he deſired, and commanded that they would obſerve.

[3] Temugin order'd his Sons, the Emirs, Nevians, and all the great Men of Mogolistan, to assemble; and the Turcomans call this sort of Assembly Couriltay. Condemir.

[4] All the Assembly made Vows for his Prosperity. Id.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

The Laws of Genghizcan [6].

By the FIRST LAW it is ordain'd to believe that there is but one God the Creator of Heaven and Earth [7], who alone gives Life and Death, Riches and Poverty, who grants and denies whatſoever he pleaſes, and who has over all things an abſolute Power.

It ſeems that Temugin had not publiſhed this Law [8], but to ſhew what Religion he was of; for [5] After the Salutations they began to read the Yaſſa. Abulcair.

[6] The Laws in the Mogul Language are called Yaſſa, and ſometimes Yaſac. Some Authors give them the Name of Altoura, but it is very improperly; becauſe this Word Altoura ought not to be uſed but for the Law of Moſes. Abulcair, p. 7.

[7] To adore one God alone was the firſt Law. Mirconde.

[8] Tho this Law had been long obſerved by the Tartars in its Purity, and is at this Day by a great many of them; yet Superſtition had by little and little introduced Idolatry into their Religion: tho the Superſtitious did not think it to be contrary to the Lawgiver's Intention; to ſave which, thoſe of the

An. Dom. 1203. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

Rubruquis.

Carpin.

Marcopolo.

Genghizcan was a Deist.

for far from ordaining any Punishment or Persecution against those who were not of his Sect, he forbid to disturb or molest any Person on account of Religion, and desired that every one should be left at liberty to profess that which pleased him best, on condition that he believed there was but one God. Some of his own Children, as also some of the Princes of his Blood were Christians, and others made profession of Judaism or Mahometanism, or else were like him, Deists; for his Sect was more follow'd in Tartary than any other, tho there were also a great many Idolaters [3].

II. He ordained by another Law, that the Heads of Sects, the Religious, the Devotees, the Criers of the Mosques, and those that wash the Dead, should be exempted from all publick Offices as well as the Physicians.

III. He forbad, under pain of Death, that any Prince or other Person whatsoever, should ever presume to cause himself to be proclaim'd Grand Can or Emperor, without having first been duly elected by the Princes, Cans, Emirs, the Tartars who were neither Christians nor Mahometans introduced a Distinction between a celestial God and a terrestrial. They always ador'd the first, yet the second fail'd not to find a Place in their Houses under the Form of an Idol, or Statue cover'd with Felt, and named Natigay. They accompanied this with others, which they said were the Images of his Wife and Children; and they address'd themselves to these Images when they had any domestick Wants. Rubruquis.

---

[3] Dicono esservi il Dio alto sublime & celeste al qual ogni giorno col turribulo, & incenso non domandon altro se non buon intelletto & sanita. Ne hanno poi un altro che chiamano Natigay che a modo di una statua coperta de saltre. Marcopolo.

and the other Mogul Lords, lawfully assembled in a general Diet. An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

IV. The Heads of Nations were by a particular Law forbidden to use all Titles of Honour, which they affected to have, in imitation of the Mahometans. He also forbids that any should give to the Emperor who succeeded him, any Title but that of Caan, with two aa. He desired that for the time to come all his Subjects should call him by the plain Title of Can; which was ever after practised by all that spoke to him: [9] But when any Person writ to him, they always added some other of his Titles to that of Can.

V. He ordain'd that Peace should never be made with any King, Prince, or People, till such time as they were entirely subdu'd.

VI. The dividing of the Troops into tens, hundreds, thousands, and ten thousands, was also made a standing Order, as a thing very commodious in raising an Army with more speed, and to make Detachments with Ease and Order.

VII. That when there was a Necessity of taking the Field, the Soldiers should receive their Arms from the Officers Hands, with whom they should be left at the end of the [9] As we in Europe use only the plain Title of King; and not like the Turks, who neither speak nor write to their Sovereign without joining with his Name some pompous Title, as that of most happy, most powerful, invincible, or, the Disposer of Crowns, &c.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

Campaign [1]. That they ſhould be obliged to keep their Arms clean, and in good Condition, and to ſhow them to their Commanders when ever they were getting ready to give battel.

VIII. It was forbidden, on pain of Death, to pillage the Enemy before the General had granted leave: But it was likewiſe ordain'd that the meaneſt Soldier ſhould have the ſame Advantage as the Officer, and remain Maſter of the Booty he ſhould be found poſſeſt of, on condition he paid to the Can's Receiver the Duties or Share ſpecify'd by the Laws.

IX. Temugin being ſenſible that continual Exerciſe was neceſſary for his Soldiers, to keep them in good order; and Hunting appearing to him the moſt proper Employment to exerciſe his Troops, he ordain'd that every Winter the hunting of Beaſts ſhould be performed in the manner following.

Mirconde. X. That from the Month which with us is March, to that which anſwers to our October, no Perſon ſhould take Stags, Deer, Roe-bucks, Hares, wild Aſſes, nor ſome certain Birds, to the end that the Court and Soldiers might find ſufficient Game during the Winter, in the Huntings they were obliged to make.

[1] In brief, they ſhow'd to their Generals both Edge and Point, and were obliged by this Law to carry all their Arms ſo ſoon as the War was finiſhed, into the King's Store-houſes, from whence they fetched them in the Winter for Hunting, which they always exerciſed themſelves withal when no warlike Occaſion preſented to uſe them. Fadlallah.

XI. It

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

XI. It was likewiſe forbid to cut the Throats of the Beaſts a Man ſhould kill: He muſt tie the Legs, rip up the Belly, put in his Hand, and pluck out the Heart.

XII. The Ordinance that the Blood and Entrails of Beaſts ſhould be permitted to be eaten, was made in his time, and put amongſt his Laws; whereas it was forbidden the Moguls, before then, to eat the Blood or Inwards of Beaſts. But as he was one day returning from an Expedition, Proviſions fell ſhort for the Soldiers, and they were almoſt faint with Hunger: then meeting with a great Quantity of Beaſts Inwards newly kill'd by People who had been hunting in a great Party, Hunger conſtrain'd them to eat them; nay the Emperor himſelf eat with them: and from that Moment the Prince, conſidering how uſeful this Food might be to his Troops on the like occaſion, reſolved to give Liberty to all his Subjects to eat them, and afterwards made it a Law.

XIII. The Privileges and Immunities granted to the Tercans was regulated in the manner already related.

XIV. To baniſh Idleneſs out of his Dominions, he obliged all his Subjects to ſerve the Publick in ſome kind or other. Thoſe who went not to the Wars, were obliged at certain Seaſons of the Year to work ſo many Days on the publick Structures, or do ſome publick Work for the State, and one Day in every Week employ themſelves in the Service of the Emperor in particular.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

XV. The Law againſt Thieving was, That he who ſtole any thing of conſiderable value, as an Ox, or other thing equal to that in Price, ſhould be puniſhed with Death, and their Bodies cut aſunder in the middle with a Hanger. That thoſe whoſe Theft was not of value enough to merit Death, ſhould receive ſo many Blows with a Cudgel, either more or leſs, in proportion to the Value of the thing ſtolen. The number of theſe Blows were generally ſeven, ſeventeen, twenty ſeven, thirty ſeven, and ſo on to ſeven hundred; but this Puniſhment might be bought off by paying nine times the Value of the thing ſtolen. The Exactneſs with which this Law was obſerv'd, ſecured all the Moguls and Tartars who were Subjects to the Grand Can, from robbing.

XVI. It was forbidden all his Subjects throughout his Dominions to take any Perſon for his domeſtick Servant who was of his own Nation, to the end that they might all addict themſelves to War, and be obliged to take care of the Captives they ſhould take, whom they muſt preſerve for their own Service. He likewiſe publiſhed two Ordinances: by the one it was forbidden, on pain of Death, to all Moguls and Tartars to give Meat or Drink to another Perſon's Slave, as alſo to lodge or clothe one, without Permiſſion from his Maſter; and the other Ordinance obliged under the ſame Penalty, all Perſons that ſhould meet in the way with a fugitive Slave, to ſeize and bring him back to his Maſter.

XVII. By the Law concerning Marriages it was ordain'd that the Man ſhould buy his Wife, Wife, and that he ſhould not marry with any Maid to whom he was a-kin in the firſt or ſecond Degree; but in all other Degrees it was permitted: ſo that a Man might marry two own Siſters. Polygamy was permitted, and the free Uſe of their Women Slaves; which was at laſt the occaſion of that great Liberty, that every Man took as many Wives and Slaves as he could maintain. [2] The Management of the Man's Fortune, amongſt the Tartars, belongs to the Women: They buy and ſell as they think fit. The Husbands wholly employ themſelves with Hunting and War, and trouble themſelves with nothing elſe. The Children who are born of the Slaves are legitimate, as well as thoſe born of the Wives; but the Wives Children, and eſpecially thoſe born of the firſt Wife, are the moſt reſpected by the Father, who firſt advances them. And this Advantage not injuring the reſt, occaſions no Diſorder in the Family, who generally live in a perfect Union and Amity.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

XVIII. Another Law condemn'd all Adulterers to die, and it was permitted a Man to kill them when ſurprized in the Act. The Inhabitants of Caindu murmur'd againſt this Law, becauſe they had a Cuſtom amongſt them, to teſtify their Reſpect and Love to their Friends, by offering their Wives to them when they came to ſee them, and regale them with their Company. They preſented ſeveral Petitions to the Emperor, deſiring they might not be deprived of this Privilege and Means to treat their Guests. This Prince, yielding to their Importunities, left them to their Shame, and granted what they desired. But to the end the Modesty of his other Subjects might not be offended, by his permitting so vile a Custom, which he thought contrary to Reason and Honour, he at the same time declared that he look'd on these People as infamous.

[2] Le donne ſono alli mariti di poca ſpeza, anzi di gran guadagno & utile per li trafiqui, et eſſercitii. Marcopolo.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

Marriage of the Dead.

XIX. To preserve Amity amongst his Subjects, he regulated Alliances, and extended the Ties of Relation by Marriage very far. He permitted two Families to unite, tho they had no Children living: it sufficed that the one had had a Son, and the other a Daughter, tho both dead; they might write a Contract of Marriage, and perform the Ceremony in their Names; and they were reputed married, tho dead, and the Families really ally'd to one another by this Marriage.

Rubruquis.

This Custom is still in use amongst the Tartars at this day, but Superstition has added more Circumstances to it: They throw the Contract of Marriage into the Fire, after having drawn some Figures on it to represent the Persons pretended to be so marry'd, and some Forms of Beasts; and are persuaded that all this is carried by the Smoke to their Children, who thereupon marry in the other World.

XX. Thunder, in antient Mogolistan and the adjacent Countries, was so dreaded by the Moguls, because it did often much Mischief, that so soon as ever they heard it begin they all threw themselves desperately into the Rivers and Lakes, and were often drown'd: Temugin finding this extraordinary Fear caused him to lose many of his best Soldiers, even when he had had most need of them, strictly forbad, under a severe Penalty, any Persons to bathe or wash themselves upon any Pretence whatever; nay, they were not permitted to wash their Clothes in running Waters during the time it thunder'd; the People being thereby made to believe that the Exhalations they caused to break forth in disturbing the Waters, occasion'd the Thunder, which would not do them half so much harm, if they withdrew far from any Water. They immediately submitted to this Law, which the Tartars, who are not Mahometans, do still observe. But for those that are Mahometans, they look upon it as a superstitious Custom, which contradicts one of the principal Points of their Religion, which gives its Professors full Liberty to wash in any Place where they find Water; nay, they are even persuaded that without such Washing there are no hopes of Salvation for them. An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

XXI. Spies, false Witnesses, Sodomites, and Sorcerers, were condemned to be put to death.

XXII. He publish'd most severe Ordinances against Governours who fail'd of doing their Duty, but principally those who commanded in far distant Countries. In whatever Place they were, Death was their Punishment if their Conduct was blameable; but if their Fault was but slight, they must come in Person to the Grand Can, and justify themselves. And this Prince was in this Case a very severe Judge.

Many other Laws were published which are not specify'd in the Authors I have translated. I am not ignorant that in the Levant there is found a Collection of Laws entitled Yasa Genghizcani; ghizcani[3]; but no Person has as yet brought a particular Account or Copy of them into France, and therefore we cannot fully satisfy the Reader's Curiosity.

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

The LAWS we have recited, and which were doubtless the principal ones, remain'd in full Vigour during Temugin's Reign and his Successors. Tamerlain himself, who was born a hundred and eleven Years after this Prince, caused them to be observed throughout all his Empire; and the Crim Tartars, as well as others, to this day religiously observe them. It must be confess'd they could not be broken without incurring very great Penalties; which alone was enough to make them continue long in force, and without question preserved them so long.

Marrakeschy.

One Author assures us that the Grand Can invented them all himself, without consulting any Books, or the Example of former Kings, and that they all were made by his own Wisdom: But other Authors pretend that they were only copy'd from those which the Orientals heretofore attributed to the Invention of Turk, the Son of Japhet, the Son of Noah.

Abulcair, p. 5.

Temugin confirm'd to his Friends the Commands he had given them; he even made their Employments more advantageous than before. And having more Designs in his Thoughts than he communicated to his Mogul Subjects, beside the Methods he had already made use of to gain their Hearts, he had recourse to Revelations, telling them that God had assur'd him that he should become Master of the World, but that it was his Pleasure that he should change his Name, and that they should

The Name of Temugin changed into Genghizcan.

[3] That is to say, the Laws of Genghizcan.

should call him Genghizcan[3]. He added, that they ought not to doubt of the Accomplishment of this Divine Promise, because they had seen that which had been made him in the same manner some Years before so happily fulfilled, in his so gloriously delivering them from Oungh-can's Tyranny. An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

Other Authors relate this Revelation to have been pretended to be reveal'd by another Person, and tell the Story thus: They say there was a Man[4], one of the first Rank amongst the Moguls, who after having wander'd stark naked in the Deserts for some time, enter'd into the Assembly, and declar'd aloud, that he came commissioned by God to find out the Son of Pisouca, to advertise him to take the Name of Genghizcan, that is to say, the Can of Cans, and to assure him that he should be Emperor of the whole Earth. This Deceiver made a florid Discourse upon the Glory and Honour this Prince should acquire under this new Name. And to make himself be heard with greater Attention, he had the Boldness to aver that he only related God's own Words. The Prophets, says a Turkish Poet, who foretold nothing but what was possible, were always applauded. In fine, Temugin, whom we shall henceforward call Genghizcan, appear'd to be in a condition able to make good the Prophecy by Force of Arms; and the People readily gave credit to it. Another Author assures us, with much Appea- Abulfarage, p. 281. Bin Abdellatif.

[3] Genghizcan in the Tartar Language signifies Can the Son of Can.

[4] This Man was called Bet Tangri. He was a Priest and Magician. He said he was a great Penitent, and made them believe that he had been taken up into Heaven, where he receiv'd his Mission. Condemir.

rance

An. Dom. 1205. Heg. 602. Mog. The Leopard.

rance of Truth, that this Prince ſecretly hired this Impoſtor to act this Cheat.

To conclude, a Diet was called towards the end of the Year 1205. Genghizcan, according to his wonted Cuſtoms, gave Preſents to every Body, and nothing but Prayers and ardent Wiſhes for his Proſperity were to be heard. His Friends the Mogul Lords, who were privy to the Secret of this pretended Revelation, ſupported him ſtrongly in all things; ſo that the Report was ſoon ſpread over all Mogoliſtan and Tartary, and was ſo ſtrongly credited, that they look'd upon all the reſt of the World as if it belong'd of right to the Grand Can their Emperor.

CHAP. VII.

The Death of Prince Boyruc. Genghizcan's Expedition againſt Toucta-Bey, and the Succeſs of it. Caſchluc's Flight to Gurcan the King of Turqueſtan, who gives him his Daughter in Marriage. A Deſcription of the Yugures, and their Religion.

An. 1206. Condemir.

THIS Prophecy was very uſeful to Genghizcan, for the Moguls breath'd nothing but War; nay they even thought it a Crime in thoſe Princes who reſiſted, whom they endeavour'd to deprive of their Kingdoms. Boyruc, Brother to the deceaſed Can of the Naimans, to whom Caſchluc his Nephew and Toucta-Bey were were fled, was the first Victim to this Prediction. An. Dom. 1206.

Abulcair, p. 8.

This Prince, being informed of the Moguls Resolution, had made all the Preparation possible to receive them: but it signified little, tho Toucta-Bey assisted him with his Troops of Merkites; for after a very slight resistance Boyruc fled, but was taken in the chase by a party of Moguls, and brought a Prisoner into their Camp, where he was put to death. And this so much daunted his People, that his Army dispersed. Caschluc and Toucta-Bey, after having given orders to their Soldiers whither to repair, betook themselves to flight, and retired to the Frontiers of their Territories at Ardisch, where they designed to get together some Troops which had not been able to join the Army before the Fight. Heg. 603. Mog. The Hare. Fadiallah, p. 319.

In the mean time Genghizcan, not being far from the Country of Tangut, marched in the year 1206 with a strong Detachment into that Country to revenge himself upon Schidascou who was the Can of it, and who had secretly lent succours to his Enemies; and there he cunningly surprized Campion the capital City of Tangut: which so astonished Schidascou, that he immediately submitted, and made use of the great Lords of that Country to intercede for his Pardon with the Emperor, to whom they went loaded with Presents. The Conqueror pardon'd the Can, and restored him to his Kingdom with the same Power as before, on condition that he should every year pay him a certain Tribute, and permit a Garison of Moguls to remain in the Fortress of Campion. And thus the Grand Can, being satisfied with the immense Riches he had found in that City, returned back to his Army. Campion the Capital City of Tangut.

It

An. Dom. 1207. Heg. 604. Mog. The Crocodile. Rubruquis.

It is in the City of Campion that the Caravans of Merchants ſtop, which come from the Weſt, and often from the South, to trade with China, becauſe they are forbidden to go further: and here they ſometimes ſojourn a long time, which gives an opportunity to the Inhabitants to enrich themſelves greatly. Here are a great many learned Men who ſtudy the Sciences, which they call Schimia, Limia, and Simia. The firſt treats of Phyſick, Philoſophy, Chymiſtry, and the Philoſophers Stone; the ſecond of Aſtronomy, and natural Magick; and the third of Theology, and Cabaliſtry, which contains the Knowledge of good and bad Angels, and teaches the Operations which belong to theſe Sciences.

Fadlallah.

Expedition againſt Toucta-Bey Can of the Merkits, and againſt Caſchluc. Condemir. Abulcair. Mirconde.

Genghizcan almoſt at the ſame time conquer'd the Countries of Crequir and Cachin, which laſt Name formerly the Country of Tangut bore. In 1207. he learnt that Caſchluc and Toucta-Bey had got together all their Forces in the Country of Ardiſch in the Tribe of Merkit. He gave them the leaſt time he could poſſible to fortify themſelves, and marched againſt them in the midſt of the Winter. Theſe Princes amazed at his ſudden Arrival, and finding their Army not ſtrong enough to ſtand againſt him, retired farther off, and went and encamped even under the Fortreſs of Ardiſch.

But their Enemy, notwithſtanding the badneſs of the Ways and rigour of the Seaſon, ſoon appeared before the Place, and forced them, maugre all the Precautions they had taken, to come to an Engagement with him. The Battel did not laſt long; for the Moguls, as if aſſur'd of the Victory, fell with ſuch Fury on their Enemies, who were inferiour to them both in Courage and Number, that they ſoon put them to flight. Toucta-Bey was killed in the Action. As for Caſchluc, he was ſo cunning as to get out of the Croud, and with ſome expert Soldiers eſcape to Turqueſtan, where he had the good fortune to be ſhelter'd by Gurcan, one of the moſt powerful Princes of Touran[1], that is to ſay, of the Tartars Country which is beyond the River Gihon, reaching to the Borders of Caracatay. King Gurcan touched with his Misfortunes, received him kindly, and conceived ſo tender a Friendſhip for this young Prince, that he gave him his Daughter in Marriage to comfort him in all his Troubles. An. Dom. 1208. Heg. 605. Mog. The Serpent.

to

All theſe Conqueſts and happy Succeſs raiſed Genghizcan to ſo high a pitch of Greatneſs, that many ſovereign Princes ſent to ask his Protection, and among the reſt Arſlancan Prince of the Carluques in Caracatay: but there happened to Genghizcan ſomething yet more advantageous, which compleated his good Fortune; and that was the Diſcontent of a Prince of Turqueſtan named Idicout[2].

He was Can of the Yugures; and tho a very powerful Prince, yet was Tributary to Gurcan King of Turqueſtan, who generally kept among the Yugures a kind of Intendant of that Province, to be watchful for his Intereſt, and to gather the Tributes which that People were obliged to pay him. He who at this juncture Mirconde. Fadlallah, p. 326.

[1] Some call this Country Touran, becauſe it was heretofore the Portion of Tour the Son of Feridoun, King of Perſia, of the firſt Dynaſty named Piſchdadiens. Thus by the word Iran we muſt underſtand all Perſia, and all the Countries ſituate beyond the River Gihon, otherwiſe call'd Oxus. Fadlallah, p. 326.

[2] Idicout in the Mogul Language ſignifies the Prince then reigning. Abulcair, p. 8. Abulfarage.

held

An. Dom. 1208. Heg. 605. Mog. The Serpent.

held this Employment there, was called Schoudkem. This Man, being naturally covetous and hasty, besides the Money and Wares which he levied as due to his Master, extorted more for himself; insomuch that the Yugures finding themselves oppress't, complained of his Abuses to their Prince: he forthwith spoke to Schouakem, but he could get no Reparation or reasonable Answer from him; nay he even answer'd to the Remonstrances he made to him with Threats. The Prince was so enraged at his Insolence, that to be revenged he caused him to be assassinated, and forthwith sent two of his chief Officers to Genghizcan to inform him of what had past, and to ask his Protection, because after this Action which he had been obliged to perform, he fear'd the Resentments of Gurcan. These Messengers overtook the Mogul Emperor in the Country of Tangut, where he was then gone to reduce to his Obedience Schidascou, who with some other Cans had revolted from him, amongst whom was the Can of Crequir, whose Country he entirely ruined.

Mirconde.

Abulcair, p. 8.

The Mogul Emperor, glad of an opportunity to make King Gurcan uneasy, who was never a Friend to him, and had now made an Alliance with Caschluc his Enemy, received these Envoys from Idicout much better than he would otherwise have done. He hearken'd to them, and made them such an Answer as they wished; and when they returned back, he named two fit Persons to accompany them, whom he charged to assure the Can of his Friendship and Protection against Gurcan.

Abulfarage.

This civil and generous Procedure charm'd the Can of the Yugures, who strait took all that he had most precious and valuable in his Treasures, and went to Genghizcan in person to offer him his service; which he did with all the Zeal imaginable, and all the Respect his Quality would admit. This Condescension render'd this Prince so agreeable to the Grand Can, that he received him with all the Testimonies of Affection that he could desire. The Assurances Idicout gave him of his Zeal were not contradicted by his Actions; for he afterwards served the Mogul Emperor effectually, who, as an acknowledgment of the Services he did him, gave him one of his Daughters in Marriage, and ever after looked on him as one of his Children. King Gurcan, who upon the news of Schouakem's being assassinated was transported with Rage, and threatned Idicout with Fire and Sword, could not execute his Threats before he heard that this Prince was become Genghizcan's Son-in-law; and the fear of drawing the Moguls Army upon himself stifled his Rage.

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

The Religion of the Yugures has not been perfectly known to Historians: some have writ that they were Idolaters; others that they were Christians, but Nestorians; and others that they were Mahometans; because several amongst them made profession of all these Religions. Their Priests, whom they call'd Lama, had their Heads and Beards quite shaved; their Superiours obliged them to observe Chastity, and to serve in the Temples; they had to cover their Heads a kind of Mitre, and for their Habit a yellow or red Tunick, close-bodied as a Cassock, and girt about the Waste: over this Tunick they wore a Cloak cut after the manner of a Christian Deacon's Cope. When the Lama's are in their Temples, they are seated on Benches over against one another, holding their Books in their hands: they are always bare-headed, and and instead of singing they read to themselves softly, and generally keep silence. Those who report them to be Idolaters, have never declared in what particulars they were so. The Idols they had are no sufficient proof of it, since in the Conversation Rubruquis had with them they assured him that they adored but one God; and that tho they had Images, it was only to put them in mind of those they represented, and not to adore them. Which might make one conclude, that they then made profession of Genghizcan's Religion, with a small mixture of the Superstitions which they had in common with the Moguls.

Of the Yugures. Rubruquis. Abulcair, p. 8. Rubruquis.

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

The Moguls were indebted to the Yugures for the Art of Writing they now use, which was wanting before their Union with this People. Whether they found the manner of the Yugures writing more convenient than their own, we know not; but they took to it, and have used it ever since [3].

The Yugures in antient times had that Name conferred upon them, even by the mouth of Oguz himself: he called them Yugures, that is to say, United. He has always passed amongst them for a great Prophet; and the Turks of the last Ages, that is to say, the Ottomans, who by the title of Ogusians which they bear value themselves as being his Descendants, say that when he was but a year old he spoke, and gave himself the Name of Oguz; but at eighteen God

Fadlallah.

[3] The Letter which Mangoucaan the Son of Genghizcan, Emperor of the Moguls, writ to St. Lewis King of France in 1254. was in the Mogul Language, but in the Yugurian Characters, and the Lines were writ from the top to the bottom, and multiplied from the left to the right. Rubruquis.

illuminated his Understanding; and whereas all Mankind were at that time Idolaters, he brought them out of their Errors, and made them worship only the one true God; which so much displeased his Relations, that they resolved to ruin him: but with the Assistance of some other Persons whom he had converted, he resisted them so vigorously, that his Father was killed by an Arrow in the Fight, and his Uncles put to flight. This is what Fadlallah reports of Oguz [4].

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

[4] The Son of Caracan; Caracan the Son of Mogolcan; Mogolcan the Son of Alinge-Can, the fourth King of the Oriental Turks, of the Posterity of Turk the Son of Japhet, the Son of Noah. From this Mogolcan the Moguls are descended; as are the Tartars from Tatarcan the Son of Alinge.

CHAP. VIII.

Genghizcan's first War against the Northern Parts of China, called Cathay; and the Success of it. His Return into his own Country. His Expedition to the Desart of Capschac, otherwise called Decht.

ALTHO Genghizcan, when he was on his return to Caracorom, had resolved not to renew the War for some time, yet he neglected not to raise Recruits, and strengthen his Army, to let his Enemies see that he was always in a Condition to be fear'd; and that whilſt he was in peace he applied himſelf, according to the Reſolutions taken in the laſt Diet, to regulate the Affairs of his Kingdoms, and ſecure the beſt he was able thoſe Countries he had conquer'd. All things look'd now as if he deſign'd to live in Repoſe, and taſte the Sweets of that peaceful Eſtate which by ſuch vaſt Fatigues he had obtain'd: but the Love of Arms, the darling Paſſion of his Soul, permitted him not to reſt; and he thought of nothing elſe but how to find a Pretext to fall out with the Chineſe, againſt whom in particular he had form'd ſome deſigns.

Mirconde.

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

The preſent State of Affairs, all being now in peace, affording him no means to quarrel, he ſought amongſt the Tranſactions of paſt Ages for ſomething fit to urge againſt them; [5] and calling to mind the Injuries the Kings of China had heretofore done to his Anceſtors, nay to his own Father and People, [6] he conferred with his Nevians and other Princes of his Court, continually entertaining them with Diſcourſes of the Injuries and Wrongs their Fathers had ſuffer'd by the Chineſe. [7] This was the Cauſe, ſaid he, that our Country was look'd upon with ſo much Scorn, and deſpiſed by all the Nations of Aſia. In fine, he excited them to revenge, by urging, that they had no other way to vindicate their Honour, and make [5] He call'd to mind his Father's Wrongs, and ſighing, recited the Injuſtice of the King of China. Abulcair, p. 9.

[6] He recounted to his Courtiers the Injuries the King of China had done their Anceſtors. Mirconde.

[7] He ſaid, that ſince the great God had given him the Victory over all his Enemies, he had reaſon to expect that he would do the ſame for him over the Chineſe.

them-

themſelves famous to Poſterity. Neither did he forget to remind them of the Promiſe God had made to him, to aſſiſt and render him victorious over all his Enemies. An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

The Mogul Princes and Lords fail'd not to applaud their Emperor's Deſign; whether it was out of Complaiſance, or that they found it agreeable to Reaſon and Juſtice, is not the queſtion. A Council was call'd to conſult on Ways and Means how to bring this great Enterprize to paſs; and it was reſolv'd that firſt of all an Ambaſſador ſhould be ſent to Altouncan King of China to demand Satisfaction for all the Damages and Injuries done to the Moguls by his Predeceſſors, with Orders that in caſe he refuſed to comply, War ſhould be declar'd againſt him. For this purpoſe they choſe Jafer, an old Courtier, a Man perfectly skill'd in State-Affairs, and ſent him away in the Winter-Seaſon. Jafer being arrived at Canbalec, which was the old City of Pequin, one of the Capital Cities of Cathay [s], and the antient Iſſedon of the Seres, had Audience of the King, whom he accidentally found in this City, for he was not uſed to reſide there but only in the Summer. This Ambaſſador made a long Harangue, which he began with expatiating on his Maſter's

[s] The Country of Cathay which is here ſpoke of, is China it ſelf, and not Grand Tartary, as it was long thought to be by us Europeans. The Eaſtern Geographers have made it known by the Limits they have given it in their Maps, and their Hiſtorians have declared it in expreſs Words. Beſides, it is now plainly diſcover'd that the Name of Cathay particularly belong'd to the ſeven Northern Provinces of this great Kingdom; and that the Southern Parts, which contain'd the nine other Provinces, were called Mangi: But theſe Southern Parts were not conquer'd by Genghizcan, but by the Moguls his Succeſſors, An. Dom. 1268. Heg. 667.

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

Greatneſs, his Elevation to the Empire of the Moguls and Tartars, and the choice God had made of him to govern the World: he afterwards demanded reparation of the King for all the Damages and Injuries which his Predeceſſors had done the Moguls; telling him that if he refus'd to comply with theſe Demands, he had Orders to declare War againſt him, and to aſſure him that Genghizcan, at the Head of a moſt powerful Army, would come and drive him out of his Kingdom, and eſtabliſh one of his own Children on his Throne.

Mirconde.

Jafer's Diſcourſe appear'd very ſurprizing to the King of China, who was much aſtoniſh'd that the Mogul Emperor ſhould form ſuch a Deſign, and venture to attack and begin a War againſt a Nation whom he had reaſon to fear, conſidering the great Damages and Loſſes he himſelf confeſs'd his Nation had ſuſtain'd by them. The King complain'd to the Ambaſſador, ſaying, Your Maſter treats me as if he thought me a Turk or a Mogul; and with this Anſwer he ſent him back: Go tell Genghizcan that altho I cannot hinder him from making war with me, yet I will meet him with an Army that ſhall make him repent his Raſhneſs. Jafer return'd with all diligence to Caracorom, and gave his Maſter an account of his Negotiation, and the Obſervations he had made, purſuant to the Orders he had given him.

Genghizcan having receiv'd this Anſwer from the King of China, continued to make Preparations for the War. So ſoon as the Seaſon permitted him to take the Field, he divided his Army into two Bodies; the moſt conſiderable he took along with him, and the other he gave the Command of to three of his Sons, Jougy, Zagatay, and Octay. Theſe three Princes march'd to-towards Courge [9], or Corea; they did no Injury to the Calmacks * thro whose Country they past, because this Nation, which was situate on the Confines of Caracatay, had already submitted to Genghizcan: but when they were come to the Borders of Courge, where there were but a few Troops left, the rest being all gone to join the King of China, they made terrible Devastations both in the Towns and Villages wherever they came, as also in the open Country, carrying away all the Horses and Cattel they found. An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

The Emperor of the Moguls did no less Mischief on his side with his Army: for after having strengthen'd it with some Troops which waited to join him near the Til, a River of Caracatay, he enter'd China at the great Gate in the Wall [1], which Alacous, of whom we have before made mention, caused to be open'd. This Alacous was Can of the Kingdom of Ancout, to whose Care heretofore the Emperors of China had committed this Gate and Wall. This Prince was at this time displeased with Altouncan, and held secret intelligence with Gen-

[9] A Kingdom situate on the Confines of China on the North, having the Sea on the East. This Country contain'd about seven hundred thousand Souls, and had been almost always govern'd by a King of their own Nation, who sometimes were likewise Monarchs even of China it self: but the King of China in his turn was also revenged, having made himself Master of Courge. Fadlallah, p. 341.

* The Calmacks are a Nation to the Eastward, not to be confounded with that of the Calmucks who live in the West of Asia towards the Volga.

[1] The Chinese built this Wall in past Ages, betwixt the Mountains, to hinder the Turks and Moguls from making Inroads into this great Kingdom. This Wall was call'd Avenconh in the Mogul Tongue, and Sedd Yadgoudge or Madgouge in the Arabian, which signifies Gog and Magog's Bank.

An. Dom. 1210. Heg. 607. Mog. The Sheep.

ghizcan, whom he was very useful to on this Occasion. He did not only open a way for the Moguls into China, but gave them some of his own Officers to be their Guides.

All the Cities which made no resistance, but open'd their Gates, and furnished Provisions to Genghizcan, were by that generous Prince spared: but those that oppos'd him were all plunder'd, as likewise several considerable Castles, out of which he took all the Riches that were there deposited for security: And all this he did whilst he waited for the coming up of the Army which the young Princes commanded.

Abulcair, p. 9.

On the other side, the King of China join'd to his Army the Troops of Courge, and putting himself at the Head of these united Forces, marched directly towards the Moguls; but when he was come within a few Days Journey of them, his Soldiers being much fatigued, stay'd to rest, and for their Security he caused all the Carts to be placed round the Army; then they made a large deep Ditch before them. His Troops stay'd not so long in this Camp as they could have wished; for being soon inform'd that Genghizcan was coming to attack them, they decamp'd to go and meet him.

Mirconde.

So soon as the two Armies were in sight of one another, they ranged themselves in order of Battel, and fell to Blows. The Combat was bloody. The King of China lost thirty thousand Men, and the Mogul Emperor had a great many Officers kill'd, and more Soldiers than the Enemy. The latter retired with all the Spoils he had gotten by the way of the Province of Pequin, in which he had some Intelligence. The Chinese did not venture to follow him, because they were no less fatigued than the Moguls, and had great need of Repose. For this reason, reflecting only on the great loss of Soldiers they had just felt, and fearing lest Genghizcan should besiege their Capital City, they resolved to make Peace with him, in order to get him out of China, which the War had already reduced to a miserable Condition. An. Dom. 1211. Heg. 608. Mog. The Monkey.

re-

Altouncan therefore sent an Ambassador to Genghizcan to propose a Peace, with his Daughter Cubcou Catune in Marriage, promising to send this Princess to him under the Conduct of one of the greatest Lords in his Court, and with all the Splendor and Attendance suiting an Emperor's Daughter and Wife. The Mogul Emperor, pleas'd with the condescending Offers of an Enemy whom he found he could not vanquish, accepted the Proposals he made him, and married the Princess of China so soon as she arrived in his Camp; and, accompanied with the Princes his Sons, retired with her to Caracorom. Fadlallah, p. 349.

But he remain'd not unactive any longer than was absolutely necessary to recruit his Army, for two Reasons: first, because he would not suffer the Soldiers to be idle; and next, because he had form'd a great Design in his own mind. He meditated how to conquer all the Western Countries of Tartary for his eldest Son, and flatter'd himself that he should succeed in this Undertaking, because of the Animosities that were amongst the Tartar Cans. He first disposed a Part of his Troops in the Countries he had subdued, to keep them quiet, and prevent their revolting; and then with the rest of his Army he set out on the way to the vast Country, called the Plains of Capschac. His eldest Son, as being the Person the most interested, fail'd not to accompany him in this Expedition.

An. Dom. 1211. Heg. 608. Mog. The Monkey.

Description of Capschac.

The Country of Capschac is of a vast Extent, and is accounted the most considerable part of Tartary. It reaches from East to West from Turquestan even to the River Volga, and all along the Borders of the antient Bulgaria, and the antient Russia, and from the Volga to the Country of Crim, where the People dwell who are called the Little or Crim Tartars. Its greatest Length from North to South is from the Caspian Sea to the great sandy Deserts, or rather to the Frozen or North Sea.

[2] This Country has but few Towns. Its Soil, if we except the great Deserts on the North Side, is excellent, abounding in all sorts of Grain, Pasturage and Cattel. A better Air cannot be found, nor better Water. The Women are handsomer there than in any other part of Tartary. The Men are courageous, and Lovers of War. They are divided into Tribes, many of which are at present composed of Moguls and Turks. The Towns being few, and the open Countries very large, every Tribe transport themselves frequently from one Place to another, seeking every Winter in the Southern Parts for Subsistence for themselves and Beasts, and in Summer visiting the Northern Parts of their Country.

Altho every Tribe has its particular Prince or Can, which governs it; yet this Part of Tartary, ever since the Moguls subdued it, has always had a King, or Grand Can, to whom whom the others did Homage. This Country in past Ages was overstocked with People, and from thence came the Huns, the Getes or Goths, the Gepides, the Vandals, the Alains, the Swedes, and other Nations who have render'd themselves but too famous in the World by the Disorders they committed. An. Dom. 1211. Heg. 609. Mog. The Monkey.

[2] This Country is also call'd Decht Capschac, and Decht Bereke. Decht signifies large level barren Countries; and Bereke is the Name of a Grandson of Genghizcan, who succeeded his Brother Batucan in the Kingdom of Capschac, to which he gave his Name, and was the first of the Mogul Cans of Capschac, who made profession of the Mahometan Faith.

Seray is the Capital City of Capschac, situate on the Banks of the River Sencla, which discharges it self into the Volga. Batucan laid the Foundation of this City, and Berekecan his Brother finished it. The three finest Rivers in the Country of Capschac, are the Volga, the Jayc, and the Irtish.

But let us return to Genghizcan. By the Victory he had formerly gain'd over Ounghcan he thought he had a right over several Tribes of Capschac who lived in subjection to this vanquish'd King; and for this reason he marched his Troops to that side of the Country. No sooner did he appear on their Frontiers, but these Tribes submitted to him; as did others who inhabited the Country of Getes, situate in Capschac, on the Borders of Mogolistan: which all together in a short time composed a vast Army. These Nations, and some others, of whom Historians have made no mention, having join'd him, Genghizcan gave the Command of one half of them to Prince Jougi-Can, call'd also Touchy, his eldest Son, leaving him in this Country with many Mogul Officers to govern them, and return'd to Mogolistan with the other half, which made an Army great enough for any Undertaking.

Jougi-Can, after the Departure of the Emperor his Father, made some new Conquests, which gave much cause of Jealousy to several Nations of the Western Tartars. These People ple combined against him [3]; but he defeated them in several Skirmishes, and particularly the Comans, the antient Bulgarians, Valacks, and Hungarians, who heretofore inhabited the Country of the Huns, Vandals, and other Nations, which for a long time have not been distinguish'd but by the common Name of Tartars.

An. Dom. 1212. Heg. 609. Mog. The Hen.

[3] He render'd himself Master of the Countries of Dechi Capschac, Sagine, Bulgaria, Russia, Alassan, Tanker, and other Kingdoms and Provinces. Bin Abdallatif.

CHAP. IX.

Genghizcan's second War with China, and the taking of Pequin the Capital City of the Northern China, or Cathay.

Genghizcan, as we have before observ'd, had given his Protection to the Princes Arslan and Idicout; the first was Can of the Carlucks, the last, Can of the Yugures. After having concluded with him what number of Soldiers they should raise for his Service, these Princes retired into their own Countries, with several Mogul Officers who were order'd to convoy them home.

These two Princes omitted nothing to procure good Troops, and each of them rais'd a Toman [4], with which they return'd to Gen-

[4] That is to say, ten thousand Men.

ghizcan's

ghizcan's Court, after he was come back from Capſchac. Their Arrival much rejoic'd the Emperor, becauſe they had brought him very fine Troops, which he wanted to ſtrengthen the Army he was reſolv'd to ſend to China, on Advice given him of ſome Threats utter'd by Altouncan againſt the Moguls: Beſides, he had now a favourable Opportunity; for the King of China being diſpleaſed with the People of ſome Provinces of Caracatay, had given order to ravage their Countries; and theſe People being reſolved to oppoſe him, had ſent Deputies to Caracorom to beg the Emperor's Protection. There arrived at the ſame time an Envoy from a particular Can of their Nation, to inform him that by means of ſome Rebels he had got poſſeſſion of a conſiderable Fortreſs which open'd to him an Entrance into China. [5] This Can, after having put a good Gariſon into this Place, came himſelf to Genghizcan, to engage him to go againſt Altouncan.

An. Dom. 1212. Heg. 609. Mog. The Hen.

The Mogul could not withſtand his Importunities. He receiv'd him favourably, treated and conſulted with him about proper Meaſures to render this War ſucceſsful. Then he ſent back this Prince loaden with rich Preſents, and promiſed either to follow him himſelf, or to ſend his chief General immediately after him, at the Head of a numerous Army, of which the Troops of the Carlucks and Yugures ſhould make a part. Accordingly the Army was ſoon in a condition to march; but Genghizcan could not command it in Perſon, by reaſon

[5] The King of China having ill-treated the People of Caracatay, Genghizcan revenged them, and carried the War even to Pequin, which was called Can-Balec, that is to ſay, the Royal City. Abulcair.

of

An. Dom. 1212. Heg. 609. Mog. The Hen.

of an Indiſpoſition that ſeized him. Samouca Behadeur, the eldeſt of his Generals, commanded in Chief; and all the Cans, Princes, Nevians, and Emirs who could get leave of the Emperor to go, went on this Expedition, each ſtriving to manifeſt how zealous he was for the Service of his Prince.

Mirconde.

Theſe Troops were no ſooner arrived at the Place appointed, but the Fortreſs that had been ſurprized was put into the Hands of a Mogul Officer; and ſo ſoon as they had reſted, and were in a Condition to enter upon Action, they ſeiz'd, almoſt without any Oppoſition, upon the Provinces of Caracatay that were the laſt of thoſe belonging to Altouncan. Then they quickly enter'd with eaſe into China by means of the Intelligence the Rebel Can held in that Country.

At the ſame time, Moucli Gouyanc, one of the moſt able Mogul Generals, marched to the Country of Courge with a Body of Troops, to hinder the Forces in that Kingdom from going to aid the King of China; and this Officer ſeized ſeveral Places according to the Orders given him. Yet this hinder'd not Altouncan from advancing his Army againſt that commanded by Samouca Behadeur. This King, as well as all his Soldiers, were tranſported that they were to fight an Army not commanded by Genghizcan, flattering themſelves that they ſhould gain an eaſy Victory. They briskly attack'd Samouca, and made his advanced Guard give way; but the Moguls, reſolving to conquer or die, fought with ſo much Valour and Reſolution, that the Chineſe were in the end obliged to betake themſelves to flight, and to ſhut themſelves up in their Cities that they they might be skreen'd from the Fury of their Enemies. An. Dom. 1212. Heg. 609, Mog. The Hen.

Altho the King of China had put abundance of Troops into Pequin, the Moguls, instigated by the Chineſe Rebels that accompanied them, resolv'd to lay siege to this City: They even tried to take it by Assault; but the Prince of China, to whom the King his Father had entrusted the Management of the first War, [6] defended it so vigorously, that all the Besiegers Efforts prov'd in vain. [7] It is impossible to tell how many brave Actions were perform'd on both sides during this Siege; by reason that the Fate of China seeming to depend on the good or ill Fortune of this its Capital City, the bravest Chineſe and greatest Lords of the Empire were enter'd into it, to share the Honour of a long and brave Defence.

The Siege of Pequin the Capital City of Cathay.

The great number of Troops that were in this City took away from the Besiegers all hopes of taking it by open Force, therefore they resolved to starve it out; and the Famine became so great in Pequin, that the Men chose rather to eat one another than to yield. [8] Notwithstanding the Chineſes Bravery avail'd them nothing, for the City was taken by a Stratagem; which being reported to the King of China, he conceived such Displeasure that he poison'd himself. Mirconde.

---

[6] They besieged Pequin. Abulcair.

[7] The King of China gave the Command of Pequin to his own Son, and caused an infinite number of Troops and Officers to enter with him into that City.

[8] Altouncan flying with his People, wept, and conceived so great Displeasure that he poison'd himself. Abulcair, p. 10.

Mir-

An. Dom. 1213. Heg. 620. Mog. The Dog.

Mirconde and Abulcair report the taking of Pequin thus, in general Terms; but Carpin gives a more ample Relation of it: He ſays, 'That the Beſiegers ſuffer'd ſo horrible a 'Famine, that they were oblig'd to deci-'mate the Men, and out of every ten kill 'one to feed the other nine: That the Be-'ſieged defended themſelves ſo valiantly with 'their Arrows and Engines, that when the 'Stones came to fail the Engineers, [9] they 'melted down their Gold and Silver, which 'was in great Abundance in that Place, and 'uſed it to ſhoot againſt their Enemies; but 'at laſt, the Moguls having receiv'd a Supply 'of Proviſions, and finding they were no nearer 'taking the City than they were the firſt Day, 'undermined it, and made a way under ground 'which reached to the middle of the City, 'and in the night aſſail'd the Chineſe, who, 'ſurpriz'd with a Stratagem ſo new and ſtrange, 'loſt all Courage, and were obliged to ſurren-'der the City to the Moguls. He adds, that 'the King of China, believing this Place im-'pregnable, had ſhut himſelf in it, and was 'kill'd with his Son; that the Moguls and Tar-'tars who were enter'd into the City open'd 'the Gates to thoſe without, and gave no 'Quarter to any they met with; and, that they 'plunder'd it of all that was precious or va-'luable, and afterwards divided the Booty ac-'cording to Genghizcan's Law.'

[9] Et cum diu pugnaſſent, & cum bello vincere minime poſſent, unam magnam viam ſub terra ab exercitu uſque ad mediam civitatem, &c. Carpin.

Let

[1] Let this be true or false, 'tis certain that after the taking of Pequin a Courier was dispatched to carry the News to the Mogul Emperor, who immediately nominated Officers to manage the Finances and Revenues properly belonging to Altouncan in this Northern Part of China, which he annext to his own Revenue. The taking of Pequin which happen'd [2] An. Dom. 1213. Heg. 610. render'd Genghizcan Master of the greatest part of the Northern China, or Cathay. He gave the Government of this City to General Moucly Gouyanc, with Orders to finish the Conquest of China, which this Officer accomplish'd in two Years: he even also conquer'd the Kingdom of Courge or Corea.

An. Dom. 1213. Heg. 610. Mog. The Dog.

[1] Pequin taken An. 1210. and according to the Orientals Account 1213.

[2] An. Dom. 1213. Heg. 610. eight Months before that famous Victory which Philip Augustus King of France gain'd over the Emperor at Bovines in Flanders, who brought near two hundred thousand Men into the Field; and over the King of England and the Count of Flanders. Father Martin, a Jesuit.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1213. Heg. 610. Mog. The Dog.

CHAP. X.

Genghizcan's War againſt the reſt of his Enemies in Caracatay, Mogoliſtan, and Turqueſtan. The Perfidy of Prince Caſchluc to his Father-in-Law Gurcan. The Moguls War againſt Caſchluc. The Death of that Prince. Genghizcan's Alliance with the King of Carizme.

IT ſhould ſeem that the Conqueſt of this half of China, would oblige the Mogul Emperor to fix the Seat of his Empire at Pequin, in order to keep with leſs Trouble the Poſſeſſion of China, by his Preſence there, and to facilitate the Conqueſt of the other half, if an opportunity preſented; but he had Deſigns in view more conſiderable than that of rendring himſelf Maſter of ſo great an Empire. He therefore was contented with ſending Governours thither, and continued to keep his Court at Caracorom, both to have an eye upon Tartary, and to watch the Motions of the Cans the Succeſſors of Toucta-Bey, who ſtill had Forces in Merkit, which was a part of Mogoliſtan; and on Caſchluc the Son of Tayancan, who he well knew did hate him. He was ſenſible theſe two Princes were able to give him trouble, particularly Caſchluc, if he could prevail with Gurcan to declare War againſt him.

Altho all theſe fortunate Succeſſes had render'd Genghizcan's Power very formidable, yet there there ceased not to reign in some of the Moguls Minds an Inclination to revolt; and Toucta-Bey's Hatred to the Emperor seem'd to survive in his whole Family and Nation, tho he was dead. His three Sons, and Brother Coudoucan, preserved that Aversion to Genghizcan even to death; nay, they were so audacious as to raise Troops, and excite some other Tribes, amongst whom were those of Tomat on the Frontiers of China, to revolt: In fine, they kindled in several Places so great a Flame, that Genghizcan was obliged to send Troops to quench it. An. Dom. 1214. Heg. 611. Mog. The Hog.

Suida Behadeur march'd against the Rebel Cans of Merkit; and after having plunder'd the greatest part of the Province where they were encamped, he forced them to a Battel, in which he defeated them; and by the Death of these Cans, which happen'd within the same Year 1214. procur'd to the Tribe of Merkit that Calm and Repose which the rest of the Mogul Nations enjoy'd. As for the People of the Tribe of Tomat, Baba Nevian who was sent against them, treated them in so cruel a manner, that the Emperor himself was moved with Pity when he receiv'd the Account of it, and order'd that care should be taken to breed up and well educate the Children of those whose Parents had had the ill Fortune to perish in the terrible Slaughter this General had made, and to marry their Wives and Daughters.

Prince Caschluc was much more to be fear'd than the Cans of Merkit and Tomat, had he but known how to manage the King of Turqueſtan his Father-in-Law, who was so powerful a Prince, that he often assum'd the Title of Padichah. Turqueſtan was then one of Mirconde.

An. Dom. 1214. Heg. 611. Mog. The Hog.

the largeſt parts of Tartary; it had on the South Tebet and India, where the new Moguls are, on the North Caracatay, on the Eaſt China and ſome Parts of Caracatay, on the Weſt Tranſoxiana and Capſchac: and during ſome time all Tartary was called the Country of the Turks.

Thoſe who knew Caſchluc, did not approve the choice Gurcan had made of him for his Daughter. He was unworthy to be a Prince.[3] He was neither good-natur'd nor grateful, and had neither Honour nor Generoſity. And notwithſtanding the Obligations he had to his Father-in-Law, the many Favours he had received of him, and the Love he ought to have born him; yet he ceaſed not daily to do him ill Offices, and excite Commotions amongſt his Subjects, nay, to forward the Revolt of the Governours of his Provinces, and even enter into a League himſelf with Mehemed King of Carizme, Gurcan's greateſt Enemy.

In fine, Caſchluc retired from his Father-in-Law's Court, and with ſome malecontented ſeditious Perſons whom he had ſeduc'd, form'd a conſiderable Body of Men, which in a ſhort time was much augmented by the ſcatter'd Remains of the Army of the King of the Naimans his Father: and whilſt Mehemed, as they had agreed, invaded Gurcan's Kingdom on the Weſt, he went to the Eaſt, and ravaged and plunder'd his Father-in-law's Provinces; who deteſting his Ingratitude, reſolv'd to be revenged on him. This King, tho he was far advanced in Years, put himſelf at the head of a conſiderable Army,

[3] Caſchluc was an Idolater. Abulcair, p. 9.

my, and had ſtill Vigour and Courage enough to conquer his Son-in-Law in the Country of Couakege. An. Dom. 1215. Heg. 612. Mog. The Mouſe.

[4] We muſt not omit to mention one Particularity which Bin-Aias relates of this Country: He ſays that in the Country of Couakege in Turqueſtan there is a ſort of Wood which they make uſe of to build Houſes, and is of ſuch a Nature that Fire cannot burn it; and a ſort of Stone ſo bright, or luminous, that the Inhabitants are lighted by it in the Night.

In the mean time the King of Carizme made Conqueſts in Turqueſtan on the Borders of Tranſoxiana. He ſeized on almoſt all the Countries that belonged to Gurcan. This Prince marched againſt him, but had not the ſame Succeſs that he had had againſt Caſchluc, for he narrowly eſcaped being made a Priſoner. The Weakneſs attending his Age gave opportunity to ſeveral great Lords of his Kingdom to form ſeditious Plots againſt him. His Kingdoms fell all into great Diſorders, of which he could not poſſibly expect to live to ſee an end. His Son-in-Law return'd to give him a ſecond Battel, in which Caſchluc had the better. He took Gurcan, and in appearance treated him with reſpect; but he render'd himſelf Maſter of all his Kingdom and Treaſure, and repaid with ſuch baſe Ingratitude all the Obligations and Favours he had receiv'd from him, that Gurcan within two Years after died with Grief.

Caſchluc preſently after this Battel beſieged the City of Caſchgar, where the King uſed to Condemir.

[4] Bin-Aias in his Book entitled Naſchac Alazhar.

An. Dom. 1215. Heg. 612. Mog. The Mouſe.

reſide; which City refuſed to acknowledge any other Sovereign but Gurcan's Son as the rightful Heir of the Kingdom. The Inhabitants defended it vigorouſly againſt Caſchluc, and the Siege laſted long; but the City was at laſt taken, and he made the Inhabitants feel the utmoſt Rigour of his Tyranny.

[5] The City of Caſchgar was ſituate in the forty fourth Degree of Latitude, and in ninety five Degrees and twenty Minutes of Longitude. It was then the Capital of the Country which Gurcan poſſeſs'd in Turqueſtan. It had produc'd ſeveral Men famous for Learning. It was ſometime call'd Ourdoukent, that is to ſay, the Royal City. And when Marcopolo was in that Country, at Caſchgar, this City, ſays he, was ſubject to the Grand Can Gurcan[6]. It was from this City that the Swedes took their Original[7].

The principal Religion which the Inhabitants profeſs'd was Mahometaniſm. The Neſtorians had alſo Churches. And the ſame Marcopolo acquaints us that this was a City of great Trade, becauſe it was in the Road which all the Merchants paſs'd through who went to China. At this time the Country of Caſchgar is govern'd by a King of their own

---

[5] Caſchgar the Capital of Turqueſtan, &c. Abulfeda, p. 235.

[6] The Caracathayans ſo called their King Gurcan, that is to ſay, the Can of Cans. Mirconde.

[7] M. Sparvenfeldt, who was Maſter of the Ceremonies to Ambaſſadors at the King of Sweden's Court, being at Paris in 1691. aſſur'd the Author that he had read in the antient Annals of Sweden, that the Swedes took their Original from the City of Caſchgar in Turqueſtan.

in

in particular, and the Name of their Capital City is Hyarcan, which is in the same Place as Caschgar was, to which one of its Princes would give his Name. It is reckon'd there are a hundred Mosques in this City. The Country produces all things necessary for Life, as also the finest aromatick Plants; and in one of the Mountains there is a Mine of Silver which brings a great Revenue to the Prince. An. Dom. 1215. Heg. 612. Mog. The Mouse.

Cotan, a City in Tugura, situate on the Confines of Turqueſtan towards the East, in forty two Degrees of Latitude, had the same fate as Caschgar. And Caschluc in the end subdued the Country and City of Almaleg, situate in the same Degree as Caschgar, which belong'd to a Turkish Prince, who was at that time absent. He surprized the Governour a hunting, and kill'd him: after which he got possession of so many other Countries, that it seem'd by his Successes as if Fortune had prepared for him a great and lasting Felicity. Cotan a City of the Yugures. Abulfeda, p. 235.

The Mogul Emperor, mighty as he was, was alarm'd at this Prince's Success, whom he hated as much as he was hated of him; but being very prudent, he would do nothing precipitately. He therefore sent a Lord of his Court to Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme, to endeavour to draw him from Caschluc's Interest, whom he called the Naiman Prince. The Envoy succeeded in his Negotiation without much trouble. Mehemed, who was also grown uneasy at Caschluc's good Fortune, and had already some Cause to be displeased with this Prince, promised to give him no Assistance; hoping indeed that Genghizcan and Caschluc might ruin one another, or at least be both weaken'd, and that he in the end should be a

An. Dom. 1216. Heg. 613. Mog. The Ox.

Condemir.

Gainer by the Diſorders which a War between them would occaſion.

In the mean time Caſchluc did a great deal of Miſchief in the Countries into which he carried his Arms, and ill-treated all thoſe who were not Idolaters. 'Tis ſaid, that in the Kingdom of Cotan, which he became Maſter of, he cauſed to be nail'd to the Door of a College, an Imam, or Mahometan Prieſt, named Aladin, who reprehended him for blaſphemous Expreſſions which he utter'd againſt Mahometaniſm.

The Report of the Cruelties of this Prince was ſpread abroad every where; and Genghizcan being ſecured of the King of Carizme, made an advantageous uſe of the Complaints that were reported of Caſchluc. He gave a kind Reception to all the Envoys who came from the People on every ſide, to entreat him to deliver them from this Tyrant. He readily promiſed to ſuccour them; and for this effect he gave Orders to Hubbe Nevian, one of his Generals, to go and make war with him as a Perſecutor of Mankind.

[7] Hubbe departed in the Spring of the Year 1216. with that Army which the Emperor had on the Frontiers of Caracatay, and enter'd into Turqueſtan by the ſide of Caſchgar. Caſchluc had Advice of his coming, and immediately put himſelf at the Head of his Troops, and marched againſt him, reſolving to uſe all his Efforts to beat the Moguls, this once at leaſt; but he was ſo unfortunate as to loſe the Battel. After which, he retir'd to Caſchgar; and finding that he could not prevail with the King of Carizme to act for him, he grew mad with Deſpair. All the great Expectations he had conceiv'd vaniſh'd, and he concluded he had no other courſe to take but to fly. Many of his Followers accompanied him in his Flight, but they were vigorouſly purſued by the Moguls, who put to the Sword all the Naimans they could overtake. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard. Condemir.

[7] Genghizcan ſent Hubbe with ſeveral Tomans of Troops, or Battalions of ten thouſand Men each. Mirconde.

ter

Hubbe Nevian ſeized upon Caſchgar, and cauſed to be publiſhed Liberty of Conſcience, which the Uſurper had forbidden. Prince Caſchluc at firſt eſcaped the Enemies Purſuit; but at laſt he was taken as he was a hunting amongſt the Mountains of Bedakhſchan, where he paſs'd for an Inhabitant of that Country. The Moguls knew him again, and cut off his Head, and brought it to Prince Hubbe, who ſent it to the Grand Can his Maſter, who by this Prince's Death was put into poſſeſſion of all the Countries he had uſurped, and the Riches he had pillaged. This War ended in the Year 1217. when Genghizcan was about ſixty four Years of Age. Mirconde.

This Emperor having nothing more to fear either from the Eaſt, Weſt, or Northern Parts of Aſia, endeavour'd to cultivate a ſincere Friendſhip with the King of Carizme. He therefore towards the latter end of this Year 1217. ſent three Ambaſſadors to him with Preſents, and a Letter which imported that the Poſſeſſion of ſo many Countries Genghizcan's Alliance with the King of Carizme.

[a] God has given me the Poſſeſſion of all the Eaſt, even to the Frontiers of Carizme; of China, Mogoliſtan, Turqueſtan, and all the Mogul Tribes. Mirconde.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

which he had reduced to his Obedience, left him nothing more to wish for than the Friendship of his Neighbours, and therefore he had sent to ask his; to the end that their People might trade together with Safety, and find in a perfect Union with one another, that Repose and Plenty which are the chief Blessings that can be wished for in all Kingdoms. The Mogul Ambassadors had Orders to assure Mehemed of the good Intention and Friendship of their Master, but in such a manner as should let him know that Genghizcan thought himself more puissant than he was. They neglected not to follow their Instructions in every Particular. And the King of Carizme, in the Audience he gave them, after having let them magnify their Master's Greatness, fail'd not, in his turn, to boast of his own Power, Armies, and the Largeness of his Empire; in short, he deliver'd himself with a great deal of Haughtiness.

Nevertheless, there being amongst the Ambassadors one who was a Native of Carizme, Mehemed had him introduced into his Palace in the night, without the knowledge of his Collegues. He first made him a Present of a rich Diamond; after which he conjur'd him to tell him the Truth, and then demanded to know the State of Genghizcan's Affairs, and whether it was true that he had made such great Conquests in China as was reported. The Ambassador satisfy'd all his Questions, and added that he counsell'd him to ally himself with his Master: but perceiving the King took it amiss that he should pretend to advise him, he thought of nothing more than how to flatter and win him; which he did so well, that the Result of this secret Conversation was the setting a Treaty of Peace on foot. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

so

The three Ambassadors agreed upon the Articles with the Commissioners of the King of Carizme. Then they ask'd their Audience of leave, and return'd with Presents both for their Master and themselves. Several Merchants of Carizme, loaden with the finest Merchandizes of that Country, accompanied them, and went to traffick in Genghizcan's Dominions; who no longer fearing any Enemy, now began to reign in Peace.

The End of the First Book.

THE

THE

HISTORY

OF

GENGHIZCAN the Great,

THE

First EMPEROR of the Antient Moguls and Tartars.

The SECOND BOOK.

The ARGUMENT.

AN Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Sultans Seljukides, the Knowledge of which is neceſſary for the underſtanding that of the Kings of Carizme. A ruinous War betwixt the Moguls and the Carizmians, occaſion'd by the Carizmians aſſaſſinating the Mogul Ambaſſadors and Merchants. Genghizcan invades and enters the Kingdom of Carizme, and makes himſelf Maſter of it. Genghizcan's Wives and Children. An Account of ſeveral Battels and conſiderable Sieges.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

The Alteration of the Treaty of Peace made between Genghizcan and the King of Carizme. An Abridgment of the History of the Sultans Seljukides, and the Kings of Carizme.

GENGHIZCAN was sixty three years old when he made this Peace with Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme: and this Treaty was very exactly observed on both sides at the beginning; and more than a Year past before either of these Princes gave the least occasion of Complaint to each other. Their mutual Civilities seem'd, on the contrary, to secure their People that their Friendship would be of long Continuance. But two great neighbouring Princes can-cannot live long without ſome Jealouſy, becauſe their different Intereſts and Deſigns will continually occaſion them to diſtruſt each other: The King of Carizme could not ſee Genghizcan's Greatneſs, and the univerſal Veneration the People had for him all over Aſia, without regret; eſpecially when he came to reflect that there was not a Prince amongſt all the Moguls and Tartars, whether in the North, the Weſt, or Eaſt Parts, who did not pay him Homage; that he gave Laws to the proudeſt Princes, even to thoſe who had moſt oppos'd his Elevation; that the Cans of Turqueſtan, and, in a word, all the Potentates round about, ſought the Friendſhip of this Mogul Prince, and ſlighted his: All theſe Conſiderations deſtroy'd the Union that was between them.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

After two Years of Peace, the King of Carizme in returning from his Expedition againſt Gazna, of which he render'd himſelf Maſter in 1217. uſed the Moguls with leſs Reſpect than before; and his Subjects committed ſuch Acts of Hoſtility as obliged Genghizcan to complain of them to their King. Yet theſe Outrages, which were the Subject of theſe Complaints, were not the Cauſe of breaking the Peace: It was the Murder of the Mogul Merchants, as the Sequel will ſhow.

Beizavy.

The King of Carizme being one of the principal Perſons in this Hiſtory, and Monarch of a vaſt Empire, it is methinks proper to ſay ſomething of his Family, and to tell by what means he arrived at that exceſſive pitch of Greatneſs in which Genghizcan found him. We ſhall not here make mention of the Slaves who were the firſt Authors of it, but begin with their Maſters, who were the Seljukide Princes, whoſe Family this King had deſtroy'd, and who who had been the moſt illuſtrious and moſt powerful Sultans of Aſia.

The Seljukides took their Name and Original from Seljouc the Son of Dacac. [1] This Seljouc was by Birth a Turk, who after having been a long time a General in the Army of Wararcan King of Tranſoxiana, was kill'd at the Age of a hundred and ſeven Years in a Battel, in which he was engaged fighting againſt that Prince, who would have put him to Death, becauſe he fear'd him. He had four Children, Michayl or Michael, Moſes ſirnamed Bigou, Jonas, and Iſrael. Michael was the moſt conſiderable of them all, and he had alſo four Sons, to wit, Togrulbey, Jacar, Jafer, and Arſlan.

Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Seljukides.

Almakine in his Hiſtory of the Saracens, p. 267.

From this Family ſprang three Branches, the eldeſt and powerfulleſt of which was that of Togrulbey. This Prince made himſelf Maſter of the great Empire of the Califs, and eſtabliſhed himſelf in Bagdad, A. D. 1055. Heg. 447. where he and his Deſcendants continued to reign to the fourteenth Generation. The ſecond Branch was that of Jafer-Bey, who was Sovereign in Quirman, and other Countries towards the Perſian Sea and India, but it did not continue ſo long as the other Branch. The Sultans of Iconia [2] made the third Branch. Cutlumiſch [3] the Son of Iſrael, and Nephew of Togrulbey, eſtabliſhed himſelf in Aſia Minor, about Ann. Dom. 1050. Heg. 442. And thoſe Sultans, tho far leſs puiſſant than thoſe of the elder Branch,

---

[1] This Seljouc was in repute at the time that Hugh Capet mounted the French Throne. Bin Abdallatif.

[2] Theſe Princes contended with the French in the Holy Wars.

[3] Some European Hiſtorians call him Cutlu Moſes.

yet

yet lasted much longer; for they did not end till after the Establishment of the Ottoman Turks, who began to reign in the Year 1299[4]; whereas the Seljukides of the eldest Branch came to an end in the Year 1193.

Michael the Father of Togrulbey had acquired a mighty Reputation by the great Actions he had done against the Princes of Gazna; but his Son render'd himself yet more famous by the Conquest he gain'd over those of Corassane.

Heg. 589. during the Reign of Philip Augustus. An. Dom. 1055. Heg. 447. [5] Even the Califf himself ask'd his Assistance against a Rebel named Bassaciri, who had taken Bagdad, and was enter'd into the Capital City of the Mahometan Empire with the Egyptian Banners. Togrul reveng'd the Califf, freed him from the Bonds in which Bassaciri had bound him, and put the Traitor to death. He once again deliver'd this Prince from Boide[6] the Last, and re-establish'd him with Honour on his Throne the second time.

These fortunate Turns served as Steps to Togrul to ascend to the greatest Dignities. The Califf, to reward his Services, married his Sister, and gave her as a Dowry a hundred thousand Crowns of Gold. He clothed him in royal Robes, and created him Sultan, An. Dom. 1056. Heg. 448. Publick Prayers were made for him, as for the Califf, in the Mosques. In fine, Togrul disposed of all Employments in the Army, and all the Posts in the Empire, as also of the Revenues. He govern'd the State, tho he bore but the Title of Sultan under the Califf,

---

[4] Whilst Philip the Fair reigned in France.

[5] He was called Caime.

[6] A Prince of the Family of Bouya, who had been the first Usurpers of the Power of Califfs under the Name of Sultans.

and

and in quality of Captain of his Court, and Grand Chamberlain of his Palace.

In the Year 1603. he married the Califf's Daughter; but dying the same Year without Issue, his Nephew Alubarslan, the Son of Jacar, succeeded him, and sustained with no less Honour than he had done, the Dignity of Sultan, which the Califf invested him withal. Alubarslan took the Grecian Emperor [7] Diogenes Prisoner, and imposed on him for his Ransom a yearly Tribute of a Million of Crowns of Gold. After Alubarslan, Gelaleddin his Son, whose Sirname was Malecscha, reign'd. This was he who conquer'd Syria by his Lieutenants, and in his own Person several other Countries in the East. He was the greatest of all the Seljukides. His Empire reach'd from the farthest Parts of the Country of the Turks even to Jerusalem, and to the Confines of Arabia Felix [8].

Heg. 456. An. Dom. 1071. Heg. 464.

These first Seljukide Princes, being naturally inclined to do great Actions, such as spoke their Goodness and Generosity, made Sovereign Princes of several of their Subjects; which gave occasion to a Poet to say that many Sultans were risen from the Dust of their Feet. Mehemed the King of Carizme, who occasion'd us to make mention of these Princes, was of the number of these Sultans last spoke of. Touschtekin, the first of his Family, was made Governour of Carizme by the Sultan Malecscha. This Touschtekin was lame, he had a great deal of Wit, and was, before his Advancement to [7] Bin Abdallatif calls this Grecian Emperor Armanous.

[8] 'Tis to him that the celebrated Epocha is attributed, which is call'd Gelaleene, of which the Persians make use in their Astronomical Computations.

this Poſt, no more than a Slave to Pelcaykin Governour of this Country. His Maſter dying, Malecſcha gave him his Place, and he did not repay his Benefactor with Ingratitude. But his Son Coutbeddin had not the ſame Senſe of the Obligations his Father had to Malecſcha: the Quality of a Governour only could not content his Ambition.

An. Dom. 1092. Heg. 485. The Sultan Malecſcha died, and his four Sons could not agree after his Death. The Empire was torn by Civil Wars, and theſe Princes by their Diviſion disjoined this great Empire, of which their Predeceſſors had made an entire vaſt Monarchy. It well may be ſaid that the Empire of the Seljukide Sultans ended in Gelaleddin Malecſcha, altho nine Princes of the ſame Race reigned after him, without reckoning [9] Bercaruc his immediate Succeſſor. All theſe Diſorders were the Cauſe that Jeruſalem was taken, when under the Fatimite Califfs of Egypt, and gave opportunity for the other good Succeſſes of the Holy War which the French with ſome other European Nations undertook in the Reign of Philip I. of France.

An. Dom. 1097. Heg. 491. Beſides theſe private Differences which continually aroſe betwixt theſe Seljukide Princes, there was daily ſome Diſpute or other to decide with the Kings of Carizme, who ſeem'd to think no more of what they owed them. Coutbeddin, proud of the great Riches his Father had amaſs'd for him, and making advantage of the Miſunderſtandings among the Sultans, took with impunity the Name of King. He died An.

[9] 'Twas this Sultan Bercaruc who ſent under the Command of Querbouca that powerful Army which he had rais'd in Perſia, and which was defeated by the French after the taking of Antioch, which it came to ſuccour.

Dom.

Dom. 1127. Heg. 522. His Succeſſors not only kept poſſeſſion of their new Dominion of Carizme, but even conquer'd that of Tranſoxiana which belong'd to their Benefactors, as alſo the greateſt part of the Provinces of the Perſian Empire. [1] Taquiſch the ſixth King of Carizme, and the Father of Sultan Mehemed, puſh'd things yet farther; for it was he that by the Death of Togrul Arſlan, the laſt Sultan of the Seljukides, extinguiſhed this powerful Family. He cauſed the Body of this Prince to be faſten'd to a Gibbet in the City of Rey, and ſent his Head to the Califf of Bagdad, as if he gloried in outdoing all his Anceſtors in Ingratitude [2].

But Heaven was not ſlow to puniſh theſe Crimes; for the Moguls came ſoon after to revenge the Seljukides: and it was in the Reign of Sultan Coutbeddin Mehemed, the Son of this Murderer of Togrul Arſlan, that due Puniſhment fell upon them.

Mehemed generally uſed to have a Drum beat at the Gate of his Palace five times a day at the Hours of Prayer, according to the Cuſtom of other Mahometan Princes; but after he had conquer'd Coraſſana and ſome other Countries, he became ſo proud, that to be diſtinguiſh'd from all others, and in contempt even of his own Religion, he cauſed this Cuſtom to be changed, or rather this Ceremony, and would perſuade his Officers that he propoſed to imitate A- Almakine. Bin Abdallatif. Mirconde.

[1] Vid. Niſavi in the Life of Gelaleddin, taken from Mirconde, Jouini, and other Authors.

[2] Four Verſes were compoſed upon the Death of Togrul Arſlan, the Senſe of which was this; Yeſterday thy Head wanted but little of touching the Sky, to day thy Carcaſe is ſeparated from thy Head many Leagues.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard. Nisavi.

lexander [3], he order'd the Captain of his Guards to let the Drum be beat no more only Morning and Evening: But he augmented the number of the Drums even to twenty seven; and besides their being beat with Drum-sticks which were all over set with precious Stones, they were beat by twenty seven Cans or Sovereign Princes.

[3] This Custom of Alexander is not mention'd in any History but in that of Sultan Gelaleddin.

CHAP. II.

An Envoy sent to Genghizcan from the Califf of Bagdad, to ruin the Interest of Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme.

Ibu Katir in Innikhab Salatin.

GOOD Fortune often makes Men insolent, and excessive Greatness sometimes becomes prejudicial to those who possess it. Mehemed having cut off the Heads of above a hundred Princes to make himself Master of their Treasures and Dominions, saw himself, by their Deaths, render'd the most powerful Monarch of all the Mahometan Parts of Asia; and was now so great, that he imagin'd nothing was able to oppose him. His Predecessors had given Laws to the Califfs, altho the Califfs who were the Successors of Mahomet, had a right to be always their Sovereigns; yet Force often changing the Fortune of the Great, the Sultans in contempt of their Laws and Religion, overruled the Califfs, who finding themselves not in a condition to oppose the Violence done them, smother'd ſmother'd their Reſentment, and were fain to be contented with a vain Deference [4] which the Sultans ſtill paid them on publick Occaſions, or times of Ceremony. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

The Sultan Mehemed would oblige the Califf Naſſer to grant him the Privileges which the other Sultans had enjoy'd under the preceding Califfs; and principally that of eſtabliſhing his Seat in Bagdad, to govern, and be named in the publick Prayers as he was. But Naſſer believing himſelf ſtrong enough, boldly refus'd to comply with his Demands, cauſing Cady Magededdin, the Sultan's Ambaſſador, to be told in the Divan that his Maſter's Demands were unreaſonable and unjuſt: and the Cady citing as a Precedent, that the like Privileges were granted on the firſt Eſtabliſhment of the Seljukides; it was anſwer'd, that theſe Princes when they were firſt called to thoſe Honours, and particularly Togrulbey, had done ſuch great Services to the State, that the Califfs thought themſelves obliged to grant them, as a Reward and Acknowledgement, the Honour of living, nay even commanding in Bagdad as abſolute; but that the preſent Califf Naſſer having no War, and by conſequence no need of any Perſon's Aſſiſtance, the Sultan did ill to deſire to reign in a City which was the Patrimony of the Emperors of the Muſſulmen, and where almoſt all the Califfs his Predeceſſors lay buried. The Cady was ſent back with this Anſwer; and the Califf ſent with him an Ambaſſador, who had orders to repreſent to the Sultan all the Reaſons Naſſer had to refuſe him the Privileges he had demanded. Mehemed receiv'd the Califf's Ambaſſador very honourably, but he abated nothing of his Demands. He even gave this Prince in the Sequel all manner of occaſions to complain: Nay, ſometime before Genghizcan's Rupture with him, he call'd a general Aſſembly of the Muftys, Cadys, Moula's, Imans, Checs, and other Lawyers, to depoſe him. He cauſed another Califf to be named, and brought into the Field a great Army, with deſign to go and take Naſſer by force in his Capital. This Army indeed was almoſt quite deſtroy'd by the Froſt, Snow, and extraordinary Rains of a ſevere Winter, and he was obliged to return to his own Kingdom: However, the Califf fearing to be in the end reduc'd to Extremities by this Prince, ſought all means poſſible to deliver himſelf out of his Hands; and could find but one, of which he would not have made uſe, had he prefer'd the Mahometans Intereſt before his own. He knew Genghizcan's Victories, and was not ignorant how potent he was; he therefore reſolv'd to make an Alliance with this Prince, and to excite him to declare War with Mehemed, whilſt he himſelf attack'd him on the South ſide.

[4] The Sultans walked on foot before the Califf, and held he Bridle of his Mule. Almakin's Hiſtory of the Saracens.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

Niſavi.

The Califf call'd his Council, which was compoſed of the great Officers of the Empire, in whom he placed moſt Confidence. He repreſented to them the Inſolence with which Mehemed treated him, and what he had to fear from the Powerfulneſs of this Sultan, who was able to ſubdue all the Empire, if the courſe of his ambitious Deſigns were not put a ſtop to: In fine, he declared to them that as Genghizcan was in a condition to revenge him on this Tyrant, and deliver him from this potent Enemy; he did deſign to treat with this Mogul Prince, and to employ on this Negotiation a Mahometan named Mahmoud Ilvage, who was Vifier to this Grand Can. The Califf's Council were divided upon this Propofal: fome approved of Naffer's Sentiments; but others, and the moft prudent, were no ways of opinion to have recourfe to Genghizcan. If we are refolved, faid they, to make war with the Sultan, who is a Muffulman, we ought to feek for means that will not hurt our Religion; and not to bring in, contrary to our Laws, the Enemies of God into the Country of the Faithful, who may occafion the Ruin of the Muffulmen and the Empire. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mod. The Leopard. Mirconde.

and

The Califf's Zeal for his Religion could not make him change his Sentiments: He anfwer'd, that a Mahometan Tyrant was worfe than one who was an Infidel; that it only became Cowards to abandon the Care of their Preservation to avoid the Pains of watching; that fince they faw themfelves threatned with apparent Ruin, they muft attempt any thing to prevent it; that, befides, Genghizcan did not hate the Mahometan Religion, fince he fuffer'd Mahometans to live in his Dominions, nay, that even one of his chief Miniffers was a Muffulman; and moreover, that they had nothing to fear as to the Moguls in that refpect, fince it muft be many Years before they could enter into thofe Countries which were really the Mahometan. In fine, Naffer's Opinion prevail'd, and it was refolved that a wife Man fhould be fent into Mogoliftan. And as it was neceffary that this Defign fhould be kept fecret, and the Envoy being obliged to pafs crofs the Sultan's Dominions, they could not give him any Letter or Paper to carry, or any thing that might difcover him if furprized; it was there- Ibid.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

fore propoſed to write upon his bare Head: and this Expedient was approv'd of. They inſtructed him in his Buſineſs, cauſed his Head to be ſhaved, and thereon wrote his Credentials in few words, which they drew in Violet Colour, call'd by them Nil[s], having formed the Letters with the Point of a Needle, as they are uſed to do to the Pilgrims at Jeruſalem. Then they immediately order'd him to depart, and make all the haſte he was able, but above all, not to tarry in any Place on the way, till he was arriv'd at Genghizcan's Court.

Mirconde.

The Envoy had the good Fortune to get ſafe to the Viſier Mahmoud Ilvage with thoſe that accompany'd him; and he aſſur'd this Miniſter of his Maſter's Eſteem and Affection. Mahmoud receiv'd him very well, and inform'd the Grand Can of his Arrival. This Prince would have had him received publickly with the uſual Ceremonies; but the Envoy deſired to be excuſed from appearing in publick, becauſe of the Secrecy which the Affair he came about required. A private Audience was then given him, in which he made known to the Grand Can the Subject of his Embaſſy; but preſenting no Credentials, and Genghizcan ſeeming doubtful of him, he ſaid, if he would order the Hair which was grown upon his Head ſince his departure from Bagdad to be cut off, they ſhould ſee that he had ſpoke nothing but what was true. They cut off his Hair, the Writing appear'd, and they ſaw that the Califf promiſed to make war with the King of Carizme, if Genghizcan would attack him on his side in that part of his Dominions that bor- An. Dom. 1217.

[s] That is, Indian Blue.

ſide

der'd on his. Heg. 615.

The Mogul Emperor, to whom the Sultan's Greatness fail'd not to give some Umbrage, Mog. The Leopard.
did not absolutely reject the Califf's Proposal; but he would give no positive Answer to the Envoy. It is unknown whether it was the Design of better regulating his own Affairs which with-held him, or that the Sweetness of the Repose he now enjoy'd after the Fatigues of his past Wars allur'd him, or that the Shame of breaking so soon the Peace he had so lately made with the Sultan hinder'd him from laying hold of this Opportunity to humble the Pride of Mehemed. He told the Envoy he was sensibly touch'd with the ill Treatment the Califf had receiv'd, but that the Treaty he had just concluded with the King of Carizme did not at this time permit him to make war with him; yet notwithstanding, his Master need only have a little patience, for that the Sultan's restless Spirit would not suffer him to let things rest long in the Posture they now were: and that, in brief, he might assure the Califf, that on the first occasion he should have to fall out with Mehemed, he would not fail to declare war against him. The Envoy return'd to Bagdad with this Answer.

The Mahometan Historians have very much blamed this Negotiation of the Califf Nasser, because the Consequence of it was unfortunate. And altho it does not appear that this Prince did ever give any Assistance to Genghizcan; yet his having but excited him to make war with Mehemed was sufficient to draw upon him the Reproaches of all the Mahometans.

One

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

[5] One Persian Author, after having much condemn'd this Step of the Califf, compares him to three devout Pilgrims, of whom a Fable is related which is much talked of in the Countries of the Levant; and in reality the Application is good. One Day, says he, three devout Pilgrims travelling together, perceived in the Fields some rotten Bones; they stopped to consider them, they disputed, and neither of the three could agree to what kind of Animal it was these Bones belong'd. They therefore resolved to pray to God that the Animal might return to Life, and agreed to make their Prayers one after the other. The first had not finish'd his Prayer before a great Wind rose and brought the scatter'd Bones together. Heaven heard the Prayer of the second also, and the Bones were cover'd with Veins, Nerves, and Flesh. And the Prayer of the third compleated the Miracle: Life enter'd into the Machine, which began to stir; and they immediately beheld a Lion strong and terrible, who getting upon his feet, came and devour'd the three devout Pilgrims who had made so many Prayers for him.

---

[5] A remarkable Fable of three devout Pilgrims, from Miconde.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

CHAP. III.

Of five great Queens, the Wives of Genghizcan; and of his four principal or darling Sons.

THO Genghizcan declined War for the present, yet he called the Princes of all Nations to his Court. He rewarded all those who had served him in his past Wars, caress'd those who had not, and endeavour'd to gain by Kindness and Presents the Love of those turbulent Spirits whom he had reason to fear; in fine, he treated all People, Moguls, Tartars, Turks, and Chinese, in such a manner, that he was no less belov'd of the People he had conquer'd than of his own natural Subjects. Fadlallah in Taric Gazani.

He likewise made several Regulations in his own Family, and particularly in relation to the Princesses his Wives, who were very numerous. One Historian makes mention of near five hundred, besides his Concubines; and he says, that amongst all these Ladies there were five who had a greater Share of his Esteem than all the rest, and who consequently had much more Power over him: Guzisuren, the Daughter of the Can of the Naimans, who was Genghizcan's first Wife; Purta Cougine, Daughter to the Can of Congorat; Oboulgine[7], the Daughter Fadlallah. Mirconde. Marrakeschy.

[7] Abulfarage calls this third Lady, Ovisoulougine.

of

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

of Ounghcan King of the Keraites, ſome call her by another Name [8]; Cubcoucatun, the Daughter of the King of China; and Coulancatun, the Daughter of Dairaſon a Mogul Can of the Merkite Nation. This laſt Lady was an extraordinary Beauty.

He had a prodigious number of Children, but he made a great difference betwixt his Sons.

Abulcair.

He had but four who had Sovereign Power and Command in his Wars and Dominions. Theſe four Princes had all great Employments; and there is ſo little mention made of his other Sons, that it ſeems as if he had had no more than them. Some Authors have given a reaſon for this Proceeding. They ſay that the Moguls, particularly the Princes, did not eſteem their Children but in proportion to the Nobility of their Mothers; but Genghiz-can's Conduct does contradict this Opinion, ſince Purta Cougine, the Mother of theſe four Princes who were ſo highly prefer'd before the reſt, was but the Daughter of a petty Prince or Can of the Congorats, and Genghiz-can had Children born of Princeſſes who were the Daughters of Kings, and lived in his Court as private Perſons. Not that theſe Children were abſolutely deprived of all Authority, for they were all Princes and Cans like the reſt of their Brothers; but their Fortune was limited to petty Governments or Lordſhips. The greateſt part of them were ſettled in Mogoliſtan, where the Emperor their Father gave them for their Portions ſeveral Provinces in the Eaſtern Parts; as alſo to his Brothers, amongſt whom Prince Utakin was Marrakeſchy.

[8] Abulcair is miſtaken, when he ſays that Purta Cougine was the Daughter of Ounghcan King of the Keraites.

diſtin-distinguished from the rest by the great Employments he gave him, and above all by being Governour of the Kingdom of China, which was entrusted to him by Genghizcan during his War with the King of Carizme. Jougi Cassar, his second Brother, had also considerable Preferments, and was one of the Generals of his Army. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard. Abdallatif.

Touschican, by some called Jougi, was the eldest of Purta Cougine's Sons, the second was named Zagataycan, the third Octaycan, and the fourth Tulican. The Emperor their Father, after having studied their Tempers and Inclinations, which much pleased him, resolved to make them his chief Ministers, and to confer upon them the most important Posts in the Empire. He made Touschican Master-Huntsman of the Empire. This was the most considerable Post, because of the Huntings with which the Moguls were indispensably obliged to exercise themselves. He chose his second Son to be Chief Judge, and gave him the Title of the Director of the Law [8], and he order'd that all the Courts of Justice in his Empire should be dependant on his. It was Zagataycan who ordained the Punishments inflicted on those who did not observe and keep the Laws, and took care to preserve them uncorrupted. Prince Octaycan had the Post of chief Counsellor: He show'd so great Prudence and Wisdom, that Genghizcan judg'd him worthy of that Place, and undertook nothing of moment without consulting Abulfarage in the Dynasties.

[8] Zagatay was the chief Director of the Laws; he had them all put into Order in writing, was the Depositary of them, and caused those to be punished who transgress'd them. Mirconde.
The celebrated Laws amongst the Tartars were called Yasa Genghizcany.

him.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

him. The warlike Affairs were committed to Tulican's Care, the youngeſt of the four; the Generals depended on him, and receiv'd the Grand Can's Orders from him.

CHAP. IV.

The King of Carizme's Conduct towards the Moguls. The Mogul Merchants go to Carizme.

GENGHIZCAN was imploy'd in regulating his Family, when he was inform'd that the Sultan Mehemed began to be weary of the good Underſtanding and peaceable way of living they had both enjoy'd, and that in contempt of the Treaty of Peace made between them, he committed Acts of Hoſtility. The King of Carizme not believing the Moguls ſo valiant as they really were, tho he was not ignorant of the Conqueſts they had made, all which he attributed leſs to their Bravery than the Cowardice of the People they had vanquiſh'd; he hence concluded that the Mahometans, being uſed to triumph over their Enemies, would not ſuffer themſelves to be vanquiſh'd by the Moguls: Theſe Conſiderations made him determine to break with Genghizcan. For this reaſon he ſometimes ſent Parties of his Soldiers into the Countries belonging to the Moguls, without leave from the Officers who commanded there; and ſometimes when they paſs'd with Permiſſion, they abuſed the People, as if War War had been declar'd between them. Nay, sometimes the Sultan's Soldiers made Inroads into the Mogul Turqueſtan, and carried away all they could lay hands of. At laſt he ſeized of a Province that had belonged to Caſchluc, which the Grand Can pretended to have a right to by the Law of Arms; and one day, by Mehemed's Order his Soldiers attack'd the Mogul Troops that guarded the Frontiers of the Country of Ardiſch, and forced them, tho againſt their Wills, to fight. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard. Fadlallah. Mirconde.

They, in ſhort, did more than enough to irritate a Prince, who often ſaid, to inform the World to what a degree he was ſenſible of Injuries, that the Anger of Kings was like Fire, which had need but of little Wind to make a great Conflagration. Yet all theſe Injuries were not ſufficient to provoke Genghizcan to reſolve upon a War: Nay, he would not even make repriſals; but, on the contrary, imagin'd that he could gain the Sultan's Affection by his Civility, and was reſolv'd to make the Union between them ſtronger than ever. It is true, ſeveral weighty Reaſons inclined him to it; firſt the Commerce that he had reſolved to eſtabliſh between the two Nations, as well for Gold Stuffs, Silver, and Silk, as alſo for other things of which he knew his Subjects had need, and the Advantage of which he was not ignorant of; beſides, the Moguls were naturally clowniſh, and he thought their being frequented by, and often converſing with Strangers, would poliſh and improve them. We muſt add to theſe Conſiderations, that he had a great deſire to know the Diſpoſition and Nature of the People of the Southern Parts of Aſia, of which he had as yet but very little knowledge; and that he hoped to learn it of thoſe who Abulfarag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 284.

came

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

came thither to trade, or those he sent along with them at their return to get information. All these Reasons made him resolve to treat anew with the Sultan Mehemed, and to send an Ambassador accompanied with several Mogul Merchants, as also with those of Carizme, who had lived in his Dominions for five or six Years past. He order'd his Wives, the Princes his Sons, and also the great Lords, each of them to send some one of their People with these Merchants, to buy in foreign Countries as they past, whatever they could meet with that was fine or proper for them.

All these things were done according to the Emperor's Desire. Every great Person made a considerable Provision of Balischs, or Purses full of Gold and Silver [1], and gave it the Officer he chose out of his Family to go the Journey. The Balisch of Gold was worth seventy five Dinars of Gold [2], and the Dinar is much about the Value of a French Crown of Gold, as it went in those days. As to the Balisch of Silver, it must be valued according to the Difference there is betwixt these two Metals in Weight and Value; and, in fine, a Balisch is what is at present called all over Turkey a Purse.

Abulfarage, p. 285.

Abulfarage.

All the Officers of the Princes and great Lords set out, accompanied with a hundred and fifty Mogul Merchants, the greatest part of whom were Mahometans; there were also some who were Christians. [3] There went to head them

[1] A Balisch is a Purse of five hundred Crowns.

[2] A Dinar is a Ducat of Gold.

[3] The four principal Merchants were named Omarcoja, Alhemal, Fereddin, and Animeddin.

four

four of the principal ones, who had more Experience than the others, to whom the Emperor particularly recommended the Management of Trading. And the better to provide for the Security of their Journey, the Carajas[4]; or Guards of the Roads, already eſtabliſhed in the Empire for the Safety of Paſſengers, were doubled. All theſe Troops of Merchants marched under the Protection of an Ambaſſador, who carried with him Preſents, and a Credential Letter, to propoſe a new Treaty, with Orders to acquaint the Sultan, that the Emperor ſent him back the Merchants of Carizme who came to trade in his Kingdoms; that he diſmiſt them well pleaſed and well-attended; that he hoped his Subjects would find with him all ſort of Protection, and that they would return to Mogoliſtan without receiving any ill Treatment, ſince he had ſent them with deſign to perpetuate that Union and Friendſhip which now reign'd between them.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

Abulfarage.

The Mogul Merchants paſt thro the Mogoliſtan, Caracatay and Turqueſtan, with the Freedom due to the Ambaſſador whom they accompanied; and arrived ſafely in the Kingdom of Carizme, as far as the City of Otrar, which the Arabs call Farab. It was ſituate on the other ſide of the River Sihon, at the fartheſt Extremity to the Weſtward of Turqueſtan; and its Territory on the Eaſt Side was bounded by the Country of Aſchaſch.[5] Otrar was a Place of great Trade betwixt the Turks and Mahometans, and there were in it many Men of great Abilities and Skill in Traffick.

Abulfeda in his Geography of Arabia.

Mirconde.

[4] Called in the Perſian Language Rahdars.

[5] Situate in 44 Degrees of Latitude.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

The Governour of this City was named Gayercan, or Najal-Can; his Mother was Aunt to Mehemed, and he by consequence was Cousin to the Sultan; for which reason some have given him the Quality of Emir or Prince. He receiv'd the Moguls at first with the Hoschgueldy or Sofagueldy, that is to say, with assuring them they should receive all the good Treatment that Strangers could hope for from a People with whom they were at peace. The Mogul Ambassador acquainted him with the Subject of his Embassy, and the Orders he had to make all possible haste to the Sultan's Court, who was at that time in Yrac Agemi, that is to say, the Persian Hircania. Gayercan told him he was going to write to Mehemed, and that as soon as ever he had received this Prince's Orders, he would not fail to conduct him with all his Moguls to the Court. In the mean time all the Merchants who were Natives of Carizme retired to Transoxiana, every one to his own Home and Town whereunto he belonged.

CHAP. V.

The Mogul Merchants are assassinated, and the Peace broken.

Abulfarage.

THE Mogul Ambassador, deceiv'd by the civil Treatment the Governour gave him, was too open in speaking of the Money which the Merchants had brought with them. Gayercan, who came not behind any Governour in point point of Covetouſneſs, was tranſported to find ſo good an opportunity to enrich himſelf. He wrote to the Sultan in a ſubtile manner, telling him there were juſt arrived in Otrar People from Genghizcan, who ſaid they were Merchants, and a Man who call'd himſelf an Ambaſſador, but that he much ſuſpected them; that they were very inquiſitive to inform themſelves of the Strength of the Places and Forces in that Country, with an Exactneſs that appear'd to him to proceed from ſome farther Deſign than Curioſity only; in a word, that he believ'd them to be Spies, and that he was of opinion they ſhould not have liberty given them to view the Countries, becauſe it ſeem'd to him that their Maſter had only ſent them to diſcover the moſt ſafe and eaſy way for him to invade the Sultan by. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

This Letter made a great Impreſſion on Mehemed. He ſent Orders to the Governour to watch the Moguls, and to do in this Conjuncture whatſoever his Prudence ſuggeſted to him. Gayercan, charm'd with receiving an Anſwer which ſo favour'd the Deſign he ſtudied to bring about, reſolv'd to murder the Mogul Merchants immediately, and even the Ambaſſador himſelf, whom he invited with all the Merchants to his Palace, pretending that he would inform them of the Sultan's Anſwer which he had received. He told him, that the King of Carizme had order'd him to treat the Moguls for ſome days, and then to conduct them to his Court. Thus this Governour drew them all to his Palace, where he had prepar'd a great Entertainment; but having them in his power, he cauſed them to be ſecretly murder'd one after another, and ſeized on all their Treaſure. They were in number four hun- Abulfarage.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

dred and fifty Persons. Gayercan persuaded himself that Genghizcan would never come to the knowledge of this cruel Assassination; or that if this Prince should get information of it, and resolve to revenge himself by force of Arms, Mehemed would be pleased, who desired nothing more than to enter into a War with the Grand Can. Notwithstanding all possible Precautions used by the Governour to conceal his Crime, God so order'd it, that he was discover'd; for one of the Moguls found a way to get out of the Palace, by making one of the Officers a considerable Present for saving his Life. He soon reached the Frontiers of Turqueſtan, and from thence fled to Mogoliſtan with all diligence.

Abulfarage.

The Emperor was no sooner inform'd by this Merchant of what had happen'd at Otrar, but he swore to be revenged. He that hour dispatched away three Ambassadors to the King of Carizme, to make complaint of so cruel an Action, and to ask him the reason why he had broken the Treaty of Peace, and what Crime the Moguls had committed; that Gayercan had caused them to be assassinated contrary to the Law of Nations, an inviolable Right establish'd amongst Kings as a means to communicate to each other their Designs, and to maintain a mutual Friendship. He charged them, besides, to represent to the Sultan, that the greatest part of the Merchants and the other Moguls whom he had massacred at Otrar, profest the Mahometan Religion; and what render'd the Murder of them yet more vile and inexcusable, was, that the Carizmean Merchants who had come to traffick in his own Country, had been kindly treated, and receiv'd no Injury: That if this villanous Assassination had been Benketir says there was but one Ambassador.

Abulcair in his Taric Alosman.

been committed without his Knowledge and Consent, he ought forthwith to clear himself by delivering up the Author to be punish'd; on the contrary, if he approved this Action of Gayercan, he had Orders to declare War against him. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

The Mogul Ambassadors being arrived at Mehemed's Court, without passing near Otrar, demanded Audience, and obtain'd it. They declar'd the Subject of their Embassy, and spoke so smartly, that the King of Carizme, instead of disavowing his Kinsman's Crime, cut off their Heads. It was thus the proud Sultan receiv'd the Mogul Ambassadors, without reflecting on the Misfortunes that would attend his Cruelty, which all the Mahometans did in the end feel the Effect of.

The Historian Abulfarage tells us that Genghizcan was so touched with this barbarous Proceeding of Mehemed, that he wept, and could take no Rest till he had got all things in readiness to revenge him. He went, says this Author, to the top of a Hill, where uncovering his Head, he pray'd God to prosper his Undertakings against a faithless Prince whom he was going to punish; and he remain'd in this Place three Nights and Days without taking any Sustenance. In the middle of the third Night a Monk clothed in black appear'd to him in a Dream, and warn'd him to fear nothing, for that he should be successful in all his Undertakings. The Emperor when he awoke was struck with this Dream. He returned to his Palace, and related this Vision to his Wife Oboulgine, Ounghcan's Daughter. This Princess, after having heard him very attentively, assur'd him that this Monk whom he had seen in his Sleep, and described to her, was a Bishop who sometimes used to come and visit viſit her Father, the late King of the Keraites, and was uſed to give him his Bleſſing. Abulfarage adds, that Genghizcan inquired of the Chriſtian Yugures who dwelt in his Court, if they had not a Biſhop amongſt them; they anſwer'd, Yes, and ſent to the Biſhop of Mardenha, who wore a black Mitre: That when he came to him, the Grand Can ſaid, that in truth this Biſhop had the ſame faſhion'd Habit that the Monk had on who appear'd to him, but not the ſame Face: That the Biſhop anſwer'd him, that the Perſon whom his Majeſty had ſeen was certainly one of the Chriſtian Saints: That from this time the Emperor had always a Love for the Chriſtians, and treated them very honourably: And, that he fail'd not to publiſh this Viſion to the Soldiery, who were more confirm'd by it in the Opinion they had already conceived that this Prince had a Communication with God.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

It is not ſurprizing that Genghizcan ſhould employ the Fiction of a Dream to animate his Soldiers; ſince many Heroes before him have had recourſe to the ſame Expedient. Alexander the Great, for example, deſirous to revenge himſelf upon the Tyrians, (who had likewiſe put his Ambaſſador to death) made his Army believe that Hercules had appear'd to him, and took him by the Hand to introduce him into the City of Tyre. What makes me not credit the Arabian Hiſtorian, is, that he gives Genghizcan an effeminate Character, in repreſenting him irreſolute, and ſhedding Tears. All the other Authors repreſent him in a manner much more becoming a Hero: They ſay, that he was in a Rage when they brought him the News of the Ambaſſadors Deaths, and immediately reſolved to enter with Fire and Sword into the Abulfarage.

Fadlallah.

Mirconde.

the Sultan's Dominions; that he cauſed the Princes his Children, his Nevians, Emirs, and all the other great Lords of his Court, to come into his Preſence, not to conſult with them about what he had to do, but to inform them of the Perfidy and Inſolence of the King of Carizme. An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

It is related in Abulcair's Hiſtory, that when he recounted to them the Story of the Merchants being aſſaſſinated at Otrar by the Sultan's Conſent, he ſet forth their Deaths in ſuch diſmal Colours, that he filled all their Hearts with Grief and Anger; and that he repreſented the Murder of the Ambaſſadors with ſuch Fire, that it inſpired nothing but Vengeance and Fury. After having ſpoke of Mehemed's Crimes, he made mention of the other Acts of Hoſtility committed in Turqueſtan by this Prince's Lieutenants, the Complaints of the Califf Naſſer, the Death of Schec Magededdin great Judge of the Mahometan Empire, who had been moſt unjuſtly condemn'd. He finiſhed his Diſcourſe with reflecting how faithfully he on his part had obſerved the Treaty of Peace with the Sultan: which ſo ſenſibly touched his Auditors, that looking upon the King of Carizme as a Monſter, they all offer'd to riſque their Lives and Fortunes to revenge the Affront done to their Emperor and Nation. This Reſentment of the Courtiers ſpread it ſelf ſoon amongſt the People; and there was not a Soldier who did not ſhow his Impatience to go againſt ſo deteſtable an Enemy. Mirconde.

An. Dom. 1217. Heg. 614. Mog. The Leopard.

CHAP. VI.

Preparations for War againſt the King of Carizme. The State of Aſia at the time of the Moguls Irruption.

GENGHIZCAN ſeeing his Subjects thus incenſed againſt his Enemy, like a wiſe Man improv'd this favourable Opportunity of executing his Deſigns; and knowing that Delays are always prejudicial in warlike Affairs, he commanded Prince Tuli to loſe no time in getting the Army ready. Tuli ſent Orders to the Generals in all Parts, to let them know the Emperor's Pleaſure. The chief Officers repaired to Court, and were preſent in the laſt great Council that was held to conſult on the Operations of the War which was going to be undertaken. After this, they return'd to their ſeveral Poſts, in order to bring their Troops to the Place appointed for the general Rendezvous. An Expreſs was ſent to Prince Touſchi, who was at that time in Capſchac, to warn him to be there at the time prefix'd.

After the Grand Can had ſet on foot the number of Troops that he thought fit to draw out of his own Empire, he wrote to the foreign Princes, both thoſe who were in Friendſhip with him, and thoſe who paid him Tribute. He acquainted them with the Reaſons he had to complain of the King of Carizme, and the Reſolution he had taken to be revenged of him by the Sword for the Contempt that Prince had shown of his Friendship. He invited them all to partake of the Laurels he promised himself to gain, and desired them to join him immediately with their Troops. An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

by

In the mean time, to prevent the Troubles that might arise in the Empire during his Absence, he every where established wise and experienced Governours, and principally in China and Mogolistan. He also ordain'd that Levies should be made, both to send to him during his Expedition, as also to keep his conquer'd Subjects in awe who might be inclined to rebel; and, in fine, he drew out of China, Caracatay, and Mogolistan, all those great Men whom he thought able to give him any disturbance, either by their Credit with the People, or by their active Spirits: and thus under pretence of doing them Honour, or giving them Employments, he clear'd his Provinces of all the seditious Ringleaders of the People. He also made some new Laws, which he thought necessary for the regulating his Soldiery: He forbid, under pain of Death, the Moguls to betake themselves to flight without fighting, what Danger soever there might be in resisting. As all the Divisions and Commands in his Army run upon the number Ten, he established a Law, importing, that if of ten Commanders whose Troops were joined together in one Body, one of the Officers or Troops should offer to break their Ranks and fly, without the whole Body's joining in it, they should be kill'd upon the spot without delay. He also made it Death for any out of ten, who seeing their Companions engaged in fight, did not go to assist them; or who being present at the taking of one of their Comrades Prisoner, did not endeavour to free him. Mirconde.

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

him. He appointed the proper Arms which each Soldier ſhould carry; the chief of which was the Sabre, the Bow and Quiver full of Arrows, and the Battle-Ax, with ſome Ropes: The Officers were to have Helmets and Breaſt-plates either of Leather or Iron, or an entire Armour or Coat of Mail; and it was not forbidden the private Soldiers to wear Armour if they were able to buy it. Thoſe who were rich were obliged to arm their Horſes in ſuch a manner, that their Enemies Arrows could not wound them. It was alſo ordain'd that the Soldiers, whether in Sieges or other martial Enterprizes, ſhould do nothing but what was purſuant to the Tenour of the Laws; and that if any were found to act otherwiſe, they ſhould be puniſh'd with the utmoſt Severity.

Mirconde.

To theſe Regulations the Emperor added one more: He commanded that if he died in this War which he was now going to undertake, the Books in which the Laws were written ſhould be brought and read in the Preſence of his Children in the midſt of the Aſſembly, when they elected a Grand Can, to the end that the Election might be made according to the Laws, and that the new Can might regulate his Conduct by them in all that concern'd him.

When all theſe Preparations for War were compleated, Genghizcan came with the Princes his Sons, and the reſt of his Court, to the Place where he had aſſigned his Generals to meet; and there he found his Army aſſembled, the fineſt Sight he had ever ſeen. And a Hiſtorian, to deſcribe their Strength and Number, makes the Spies whom the King of Carizme had ſent to view them, ſpeak thus: They are, ſay they to the Sultan, all compleat Men, vigorous, and look like Wreſtlers; they breathe nothing nothing but War and Blood, and ſhow ſo great an Impatience to fight, that the Generals can ſcarce moderate it: yet tho they appear thus fiery, they keep themſelves within the bounds of a ſtrict Obedience to Command, and are intirely devoted to their Prince; they are contented with any ſort of Food, and are not curious in the choice of Beaſts to eat, like Muſſulmen, ſo that they are ſubſiſted without much trouble; and they not only eat Swines-Fleſh, but feed upon Wolves, Bears, and Dogs, when they have no other Meat, making no diſtinction betwixt what was lawful to eat, and what was forbidden; and the Neceſſity of ſupporting Life takes from them all that Diſlike which the Mahometans have for many ſorts of Animals: As to their number, (they concluded) Genghizcan's Troops ſeem'd like the Graſs-hoppers, impoſſible to be number'd. An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

In reality, this Prince making a review of his Army, found it to conſiſt of ſeven hundred thouſand Men. This is not ſurprizing, when we conſider the great Extent of the Countries Genghizcan had ſubdued, and reflect, that beſides his own Troops, he had all his Friends and Tributaries, and even thoſe of the Sultan's Enemies, which were joined with the Emperor's, and therefore his Army might be as numerous as is reported. And it is not an unexampled thing in Aſia for a Prince to have ſuch a mighty Army: That of Darius was compos'd of ſeven hundred and fifty thouſand Men, as is credibly reported, when he made war againſt Alexander. But let that be as it will, the Grand Can marched with his Army, and advanced towards Sultan Mehemed, Ann. Dom. 1218. And ſince it is from the Date of this Expedition that the great Irruption of the Mo- Abulcair, p. 11. Condemir in Habibaſſuyar.

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

Moguls and Tartars into the Southern Parts of Asia is reckon'd to commence, it is fit to obſerve the State this Part of the World was in at that time.

The State of Aſia at the time of the Moguls and Tartars Irruption.

The Indians were govern'd by many Kings, the moſt powerful of whom was the King of the Patans. The Southern China, which was called Mangi, had its particular Monarch; and the Northern, that is to ſay, Cathay, was under the Moguls, as were alſo both the Tartarys, the Eaſt and North, with a great part of the Weſt, and of Turqueſtan. The Sultan Mehemed poſſeſs'd alſo ſeveral Parts of Turqueſtan and all Tranſoxiana; beſides which, he was Maſter of the beſt part of the Empire of Perſia, call'd by the Perſians Iran; and all the Coraſſane, all the Frontiers of India, the Country of the Medes, which was called Azerbijana, and the Perſian Hircania otherwiſe called Irac Agemi, were dependent upon him. The antient Perſia, called Fars, of which Schiraz was the Capital, and ſeveral other Provinces, lived under his Government. In a word, the Sovereigns of the antient Empires of Perſia, and the Medes and Parthians, were almoſt all become ſubject to him, and paid him Tribute.

Georgia and the Countries adjacent had their own particular Princes who were independent. As for the great Armenia, its King paid Tribute to the King of Carizme. The Califf Naſſer reign'd in Bagdad over Chaldea, otherwiſe called Irac Araby, over a part of Meſopotamia, the three Arabia's, and ſome other Countries of Perſia. The Atabequite Princes of Mouſel, improperly call'd Niniveh, the Deſcendents of the great Noureddin Prince of Syria, poſſeſs'd almoſt all the reſt of Meſopotamia; but the Civil Wars, cauſed by the Minority of Naſſered- din and by Ambition, held these Princes in Arms one against another. At this time the Successors of Saladin were also very powerful, one part of Syria had submitted to them [6], and Egypt acknowledged them for Sovereigns. An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

din

The Sultans of Iconia, of the third Branch of the Seljukides, govern'd in Asia Minor, or Anatolia, which the Orientals call Biladerroum, that is to say, the Country of the new Romans: [7] Azzeddin Keicaous reign'd there. The Scepter of the Empire of Constantinople, which as yet bore sway in some Parts of Asia, was at this time in the Hands of the French, who had made themselves Master of it, An. Dom. 1293. Heg. 601.

The Christians Affairs in Palestine were at this time in a very ill posture; they had lost the Kingdom and City of Jerusalem, which, with many others, were taken from them by Saladin, Ann. Dom. 1187. Heg. 583. and there remain'd in their hands but some few Places, as the City of Acre or Ptolemais, which Philip Augustus King of France, aided by Richard King of England, had conquer'd, according to the account of William of Tyre, in 1191. or 1192. as also the City of Tyrus, Cæsarea, and Tripoly in Syria. This was pretty near the State of Affairs in Asia at the time of the Moguls Irruption in 1218. and 1219. whilst Lewis the Son of Philip Augustus, according to Calvisius, was employ'd against the Albigenses. William of Tyre.

---

[6] Almalekal Kamel, Saladin's Nephew, began then to reign.

[7] He died Ann. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. and Aladin Keicobad succeeded him.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

CHAP. VII.

Genghizcan's Arrival in the Dominions of the Sultan of Carizme. The Battel of Caracou.

Bin Abdallatif. Abulfarage.

HISTORIANS do not precisely mention the Places by which the Moguls entered into the King of Carizme's Dominions. They do not so much as mention in what Month of the Year he left Mogolistan. They only assure us, that he marched by Caracatay and Turquestan in the Year of the Hare, which was A. D. 1218. Heg. 615. and that his Troops enter'd into the Province of Farab, of which the City of Otrar was the Capital, near the River of Alschasche, otherwise called the Sihon or Jaxartes, situate in the forty fourth Degree of Latitude. Genghizcan was then sixty five Years of Age.

Abulfed. Geogr. in Tacouim Albuldan.

Abulcair, p. 12.

In the mean while, the Sultan of Carizme, who had by his Spies learn'd the Moguls Preparations for War, was not idle: He had caused several considerable Levies to be made, and had neglected nothing that could procure him a powerful Army, notwithstanding the Contempt he had before shewn for these his Enemies. And Feraber, a Town in the Territory of Bocara, situate in thirty eight Degrees and forty Minutes of Latitude, in the Confines of the Dominions of the antient Carizme, being one of the most easy Passages to enter by from from Coraſſane into Tranſoxiana, the Sultan made choice of it to be the Place of the general Rendezvous. The Troops of Coraſſane, of Balc or the Bactrians, of Perſia, the Borders of India, and other Parts of Iran, who obey'd the Sultan of Carizme, repair'd thither. Theſe he join'd with thoſe of Touran, who were under the Command of Gelaleddin the Son of Mehemed: and then the Sultan went and view'd his Army, taking upon himſelf the Command of the Troops of Iran; and when all the Army was come together, they were found to be four hundred thouſand fighting Men [s]. An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare. Fadlallah.

Tho this Army was very great, yet it was far inferiour in number to that of the Moguls. Some Carizmean Generals, on the Spies report, took the Liberty to repreſent to the Sultan the Inequality of the Armies; but this Prince was too proud to hearken to their Remonſtrances: 'Do you fear the Moguls, ſaid he; 'and do you not well know, that if they have 'more Men than we, yet to ballance that we 'have more Courage than they? The Moguls 'are but Moguls, that is to ſay, Enemies whom 'we have no reaſon to fear. If they have 'gain'd ſome Advantages, and vanquiſh'd ſome 'Nations, they were only Pagans who were 'unskill'd in the Art of War; but now they 'are going to deal with Mahometans who 'are well verſed in Arms, who have con'quer'd Perſia and all the reſt of Iran, and 'whom no Nation or People has as yet been 'able to conquer; Men who have triumph'd 'over the moſt warlike Nations in all Aſia: Abulcair, p. 12.

[s] Abulcair makes mention but of three hundred thouſand Soldiers.

'There-

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

'Therefore resolve to execute my Orders, and bravely second me, and be assur'd that these rash Men shall soon know to their own cost, the Difference between you and those cowardly People they have conquer'd. Let my Troops march in four Bodies, to the end they may the better subsist, and take the Road to the Country of Alschaschc, whither I will soon come to put my self at the head of them.'

The King of Carizme's Generals obey'd, and the Army was conducted thither in so good Order, that nothing was wanting. This Prince kept his Word, he past the River of Jaxartes[2] with his Troops, and led them to Otrar, not doubting but that the Mogul Emperor had a design upon that City, both because of the bloody Scene that had been acted there, and by reason it would open him a free Passage into the very Heart of the Kingdom of Carizme. In short, he found the Moguls in a Place called Caracou. The two Armies immediately prepared to fight, and in a little time the Squadrons and Battalions on both sides appear'd ranged in Order of Battel. Then the great Trumpet Kerrena, which was fifteen Foot long, was sounded; the Brass Timbrels call'd Cous, the Drums, Fifes, and other warlike Instruments, play'd, sounding the Charge. The Carizmeans, who were all Mahometans, implor'd the Assistance of their false Prophet; and the Moguls trusting to their good Fortune, and the Conduct of their Emperor, promised themselves a compleat Victory.

---

[2] Jaxartes was called Sihon by the Orientals.

Jougi

Jougi Caſſar, Genghizcan's ſecond Brother, commanded the Mangalay [1]. He advanced towards the firſt Ranks of the Enemies, who immediately detached ſome Troops to charge him, but this Prince defeated them. Then Gelaleddin the Sultan's Son began the general Fight, and charged Prince Touſchi, who was at the head of the firſt Body of Moguls; their Troops join'd, and after a very long and ſharp Diſpute, Gelaleddin got the better. Then the Carizmeans thought themſelves ſecure of the Victory, and nothing was heard in their Army but Shouts of Joy. But Genghizcan, not much ſurprized at their Succeſs, ſent other Troops, under the Command of Tulican, to ſupport Touſchi, whilſt he at the Head of the main Body of his Army with his Son Zagatay fell upon the Sultan, who very ill-treated his Left Wing. This Shock was terrible. The Carizmeans, animated by the Example of their King, who fought with extraordinary Bravery, maintain'd the Advantage they had gotten as long as they were able; yet notwithſtanding the Reſolution with which the Sultan fought, he ſaw himſelf at laſt forced to quit the Field of Battel, and began to give back, when the Prince his Son, after having beat the other Troops ſent againſt him, made haſte to rejoin him, and renew'd the Fight. The Mahometans took freſh Courage, and return'd to the Charge with more Fury than before. Gelaleddin did on this occaſion moſt ſuprizing things, and the very com-

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

The Battel of Caracou between the Moguls and Carizmeans. Abulcair, p. 12.

[1] Mangalay is ſometimes taken for the Van-Guard, ſometimes for the forlorn Hope, and ſometimes for the Scouts.

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

mon Soldiers and Officers made appear their extraordinary Valour.

Abulcair, p. 12.

On the other hand, the Moguls did no ways fail of their usual Bravery, and never behav'd themselves more valiantly than on this Occasion; and having now to do with Men as courageous as themselves, there was a dreadful Slaughter on both sides, and the Victory remain'd doubtful a long time: but at last, the Mogul Emperor, who had still a great Body of Reserve under the Conduct of his Son Octay, bid him march and charge the Enemy in the Flank. Octay executed his Orders with much Courage; and these fresh Troops made a terrible Havock. In the mean time, the Carizmeans sustain'd this last Attack with great Firmness. They fought till it was Night; then each Party retired to their Camps, and gather'd up their wounded as well as they could. After this, they fortify'd themselves on both sides all they could, to avoid being surprized, and with design to renew the Fight the Day following. But when the King of Carizme came to examine the State of his Troops, and found they were diminish'd by more than a hundred and sixty thousand Men kill'd and wounded, he thought no more of renewing the Fight. And what the Spies reported quite took from him all Inclination to it; for they all said, that the Mogul Army, tho so ill-treated, were still much superiour to his in number: He therefore thought only how to put himself into such a condition as might secure him from being soon attack'd. He entrench'd himself so, that Genghizcan did not think fit to venture it, nor was so rash as to undertake to force his Camp.

Fadlallah.

† During

[2] During this short Suspension of Arms, the Sultan not daring to risque a second Battel, the loss of which would have entirely been the Ruin of his Kingdom, resolv'd to distribute his Army into the most considerable Places of Strength, and to provide for the Safety of the rest the best he could. He then sent Garisons into his best Cities, and kept with him only a flying Camp, to be ready to march where there was the most urgent Occasion. He gave all the rest of his Troops to Prince Gelaleddin, who did not approve of this his Design; and, contrary to his Commands, retired to Coraſſana, where he encreased his Army with all the Troops he could get together. And in truth, in thus dividing his Forces, the King of Carizme yielded the Victory to his Enemy; who seeing himself Master of the Field, sent his two Sons the Princes Octay and Zagatay, to besiege Otrar with two hundred thousand Men [3]. Prince Touschi went farther off, towards the West, between the Jaxartes and Capschac, to observe what past there, and wait his Father's Orders. Elac Nevian was his Lieutenant General, and a hundred thousand Men were under his Command. Besides this, many Mogul Cap-

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

Fadlallah.

[2] This Battel was fought in the Beginning of the Year 1219. Heg. 616. on the Borders of the Country of the Getes. One Historian says that it was in the Kingdom of Carizme: but that does not contradict the other; because that in that time all the Countries from beyond the River Jaxartes to the Oxus, whatever particular Names they had, were looked upon as a Part of the Kingdom of Carizme, because they belong'd to the Sultan Mehemed.

[3] Abulfarage, in his History of the Dynasties, mentions the Siege of Otrar in the Year 1213. but he is mistaken, for it was in 1219, according to the Account given by the best Authors.

An. Dom. 1218. Heg. 615. Mog. The Hare.

tains went with their Troops into Turqueſtan, and into other Countries towards the Eaſt, and did much miſchief there.

Yet there ſtill remain'd with Genghizcan more than two hundred thouſand Men, which he uſed for his own Expeditions. It was with theſe Troops, accompanied with Prince Tuli, he marched to Bocara and Samarcande, not only to hinder the Succours that might get together and be ſent to the Places which were beſieged, but to beſiege theſe two Cities, and reduce them to his Obedience.

CHAP. VIII.

The Siege of Otrar.

Mirconde.

SO ſoon as the Princes Octay and Zagatay had received their Orders from the Grand Can their Father to beſiege Otrar[4], they marched their Troops and ſat down before that Place, having firſt got Proviſions, and all other things neceſſary for a Siege which they with reaſon judged would laſt long. Some of the Inhabitants of that City being taken and brought before them, inform'd them, that, beſides the Strength of the Walls, a great number of Troops gariſon'd it; that ten thouſand Horſe, commanded by Cariacas Captain of Bin Calican in Vafyatalayan, i. e. the Hiſtory of illuſtrious Men.

[4] Sometimes this City was called by the Name of Farab, becauſe it was the Capital of the Province of that Name.

the

the Guards to the Sultan, were a few Days before got into it; and, that the Governour had before his coming caused fifty thousand fighting Men to come into that City[s]: They added, that there was in Otrar so great a Plenty of all sorts of Ammunition and Provisions, that the Besieged could not want any thing for a long time; and that Gayercan had turn'd out all the useless Mouths. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Octay and Zagatay sent word to the Grand Can what Condition the Place was in that they were going to besiege, which obliged the Emperor to go in Person and view the Place. Being come there, he set up his Pavilion before the Walls, took a view of the Outworks, and having well examined them every where, gave these Princes his Advice, or rather his Commands, what to do; and then he went for Transoxiana, where he had great Designs to execute. After his Departure the Princes first fixt the Quarters for the Army round about the City; and then fortifying themselves, order'd out some Troops to guard their Convoys of Provisions. In a word, they used all means imaginable to render themselves soon Masters of the Place. Abulcair, p. 14.

Gayercan on his side took all the Measures possible to defend himself. He employ'd the Inhabitants and Soldiers in fortifying their Walls still more than they were before, raised new Towers to incommode the Besiegers, and regulated the Quantity of Victuals that he would permit them to consume every day. Ibid. p. 15.

---

[s] Abulfarage says, five thousand Men; but this is a Fault in the Printing, for he meant fifty thousand, according to the Report of other Authors.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

The Moguls began the Siege with bringing up their Battering Rams, and other Engines, particularly thoſe which could defend and skreen the Men who were employ'd to fill up the Town-Ditch. Gayercan uſed all his Efforts to hinder them. He gave Orders that frequent Sallies ſhould be made upon them, and ſhot an infinite number of Arrows from the Top of the Walls; and the Beſieged made ſo good uſe of their burning Darts, that they often burnt the Moguls Engines, who were not able for a long time to fill up the Ditch: yet at laſt they accompliſh'd it, and the Mahometans were obliged to place all their Hopes in the Strength of their Walls, and the Valour of thoſe who defended them.

Abulcair, p. 15.

Fadlallah.

When the Ground was level'd, and the Outworks were no longer a Hindrance to the Moguls, the Princes cauſed a great number of Engines and Battering Rams to be play'd againſt the City, to beat down the Walls; but the Beſieged made frequent Sallies, and moſt times with good Succeſs, often burning the Beſiegers Engines, or rendring them uſeleſs by ſlinging againſt them Stones and other things from the top of the Towers: ſo that the Mogul Princes ſeeing many Months were paſt without having made any conſiderable Progreſs, and that they had already loſt a great many Men, reſolved to do nothing more without the Advice of their moſt experienced Captains; to the end, that if by any Misfortune the Siege did not ſucceed according to the Emperor's Expectation, they might not bear the blame alone. They therefore call'd a Council of War, to deliberate what was to be done in order to reduce the Place; and of all the different ways that were propoſed, that of reducing it by Famine was the moſt Abulfarage, p. 286.

Mirconde.

most approv'd, and had the Majority of Voices: for almost all the Officers judged that this was the surest Way, and the most likely to succeed. Yet the two Princes, tho they were of the same opinion, dared not to attempt it without having first acquainted the Emperor. They sent away Couriers to him immediately, to inform him of their Design. Genghizcan return'd them no other Answer, but only that they must fight. So soon as Octay and Zagatay had learn'd and made known to the Officers the Grand Can's Pleasure, they put all things in a readiness blindly to obey his Orders, and with more Ardour than they had shown, even when they first began the Siege; so that it seem'd that this Prince's Orders had given them new Vigour, and illuminated their Understandings. The Besieged in a short time saw the State of their Affairs quite changed. In less than a Month all their Towers and Batteries were thrown down, their Engines broke, Breaches made in their Walls; and they were reduced to retire and defend themselves behind their inward Works, which were in truth no less strong than their first. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Abulcair, p. 15.

Yet this Change of Affairs did not despirit their Governour. He was a Man of Wit and Courage, and inspired the Besieged with so great an Aversion for the Enemies, as being Idolaters, that the Inhabitants and Garison resolved to suffer the last Extremities rather than to yield: So that the Moguls, to please Genghizcan, for four Months used their utmost Efforts to take the Place, but could not. Gayercan, who expected nothing but Death if the Town fell into their hands, every day invented new ways to prolong the Siege; yet he had by this time lost the best Part of his Troops, and Mirconde. Fadlallah.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

and there was no likelihood that it could hold out much longer. Cariacas was so sensible of it, that he several times press'd him to capitulate, to save their own Lives, and those of the other Mahometans who yet remain'd in the City: but Gayercan was not ignorant that whatever Treaty he could make, the Enemies would not observe it in what related to himself, and so refused to yield, resolving to hold it out to his last Breath. Caraicas, whom no Reasons obliged to abandon himself to Despair, would not consent to quit his Hopes of saving his Life; and therefore secretly represented to the Officers who were under his Command, that the Governour being desperate, sought nothing more than to perish himself, and to sacrifice all the Garrison and People along with him; that it was best for them to find some way to get out of the City, whose Ruin was inevitable; and that it was Madness to strive to defend it any longer; that they would do a commendable Action in preserving their Troops, to go and succour their Prince and Country in some other Place, instead of losing them with Gayercan, who was guided only by his Despair; that they need not fear any Person would accuse them of Cowardise, since the Courage with which they had defended the Place till now, was sufficient to set them above the like Reproaches.

Abulcair, p. 16.

All the Friends of Cariacas approved his Proposition; and the time was fix'd upon when they should go out of the City; and it was agreed they should all repair to that Quarter where the Gate of Dervazey Soufy was, which was in the power of the Officers of Cariacas. Accordingly they went out at this Gate in the Night, having sent Advice of their coming coming to the Mogul Generals, who had them conducted to their Camp. But they were not received there as they expected: The Princes, after having question'd them concerning the State of the City, refused them the Passport they desired, and told them, that the Moguls had so great an Aversion for People who were false to their Prince, that they punished them wherever they met with them. Cariacas endeavoured to justify himself, but his Reasons were not heard, and he was put to death on the spot, as well as all the other Carizmean Officers. They likewise put some Soldiers to death, and all the rest were made Slaves. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

This Desertion did not intimidate the Besieged; they fought with the same Bravery as before. Even Gayercan improved this Opportunity to animate his Soldiers, and went about to make a Speech to them on this Subject; but they made him sensible he had no need to excite them to do their Duty, that he should find they were all disposed to die like brave Men, and not as Cowards like their Companions; in fine, they all vow'd to perish in defence of the City, and to shew themselves faithful to their Religion and Prince.

In the mean time, the Moguls having learn'd from Cariacas where the weakest Part of the Town was, made so good advantage of his Information, that after having given a fierce Assault, and made a considerable Breach, they briskly enter'd thro it into the City, and put abundance of the People to the Sword; yet it was some time before they could get to be Masters of the City: for there yet remain'd twenty thousand Men with the Governour, and they had fortify'd every Place they could, having cast up Intrenchments in all the narrow Streets, Abulfarage, p. 286.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Abulfarage, p. 286.

Streets, which gave the Beſiegers more trouble than the Caſtle itſelf, tho it was very well fortify'd: beſides this, Gayercan kept the groſs of the Troops in a ſtrong Hold, from whence he could ſend them to the Places where was moſt need. Nothing was more brisk than the Beſiegers Attacks, nor more obſtinate than the Reſiſtance of the Beſieged. During a whole Month they fought on both ſides with an undaunted Bravery. At laſt the Caſtle was carry'd; but the narrow Places that were fortify'd held out longer, in which fifty Men were able to ſuſtain an Attack againſt a much greater number of Aſſailants, whoſe being ſo numerous did not avail them, but expoſed them to the Arrows of the Beſieged, by which they daily loſt a great many People. The City became full of dead Bodies. The Houſes were beaten down in ſuch a manner that every one ſtrove to hide himſelf in the Ruins, to fight under Covert, which ſtill retarded the taking of Otrar.

Abulcair, p. 16.

Fadlallah.

Genghizcan, to whom the Princes daily ſent Couriers to inform him of what paſt, amazed at their making ſo long a Defence, forbid his Soldiers killing Gayercan, that he might have the puniſhing of him himſelf; for he did not think ſo wicked a Man merited ſo honourable a Death as to die in Fight. This Order coſt a great many Moguls their Lives; for being commanded to ſpare the Governour, they were obliged to pick out thoſe they would aim to kill: whereas the Carizmeans having nothing to take care of, kill'd a great many more of the Enemies than they loſt of their own People. The Beſiegers however ſtill bringing up freſh Troops to relieve thoſe who were tired, at length found an end of their Enemies, and Numbers carried the Day. Gayercan reremain'd with two Men only, yet would not think himself conquer'd; but like a dying Person, who exerts all the Strength he has left to struggle with Death, he took fresh Courage: and retiring up to a Terrass-Walk belonging to his Palace, with his two Companions, whom the same Fury animated, from thence rolled down great Stones upon the Moguls who came near, and they tumbling down upon their Comrades who follow'd them, dragg'd them down with them. At last Gayercan, after having kill'd a great number of his Enemies, lost his two Companions, and remain'd alone against the Moguls, who having at length surrounded him, seized him [7], loaded him with Chains, and carried him to the Princes, who found as much Constancy of Soul in him then, as he had shown Courage before. They sent him under a strong Guard to the Grand Can, to dispose of him as he pleased. The Emperor after having reproached him as the Cause of so many Misfortunes to his Countrymen, caused him to be put to death at Samarcande in the Palace of Gheuc-Serai.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Abulfarag. p. 286, 287.

[8] The Siege of Otrar had lasted five Months. They razed the Castle, but they rebuilt the City Walls; and then they permitted the old Men, Women, and Children, who had been turned out by Gayercan, to return into it with the Country People who had retired from the City. And it was forbid under severe Penalties,

---

[7] Cum autem occisi essent duo ipsius Socii, ipse solus manens pugnavit lateribus quos illi puellæ e parietibus desumptos porrigebant, quos cum amplius accipere non posset circumdederunt ipsum Mogulenses. Abulfarage, p. 287.

[8] Qua in expugnanda quinque mensium spatium insumserunt. Ib. p. 286.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

ties, to the Garison which was left there, any ways to disquiet or molest the Inhabitants. After the Princes Octay and Zagatay had established such Orders as they thought fit in the Country of Farab, they sent away twenty thousand Men to their Brother Touschican, as the Emperor had commanded. After which they past the Jaxartes to enter into Transoxiana, and join'd themselves and Forces to the Imperial Army.

CHAP. IX.

The Sieges of the Cities of Saganac, Uzkend, Alschasche, Fenaket or Toncat, by Touschican.

DURING the Siege of Otrar, Genghiscan got Information after what manner the King of Carizme had disposed his Forces: and now knew, that besides the sixty thousand Men he had detached for that City, he had sent five thousand to Junde to strengthen that Garison; and that the Governour of the Country kept ten or twelve thousand Men at Saganac and Uzkend; that there were as many more at Toncat, which some call Fenaket, twenty thousand at Bocara, a hundred thousand at Samarcande, and in the City of Carizme and other Places proportionable: the Sultan thinking to secure these Cities by sending strong Garisons into them. The Grand Can on this Information, resolved to besiege the Places that were of most Importance, and neareſt the River Jaxartes, to the end he might might leave no Place behind him that could give him any trouble when he was gone farther off, and employ'd in some other Siege. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Jaxartes is a River in Tartary, which the Orientals, as we have already taken notice, called Sihon; and besides its particular Name, it likewise took that of the Territories it ran thro, as of the Country of Alschaschc, and likewise of the Country of Cogende, where it was call'd the River Cogende, and so changed its Name in other Countries thro which it past. It had chiefly two Sources, which it sprung from in Mount Imaus, from whence it took its course towards the West, winding by the Countries of Fergane, Cogende, Alschaschc, Ferab, and some others, to pass into the Caspian Sea, where it discharged itself with great Violence. This is the River which Alexander the Great, according to Quintus Curtius, believed to be the Tanais, and which he crossed over upon a Bridge of Boats to go against the Scythians who molested him, being in fear that he would incommode them, by means of the City he had caused to be built on the Banks of this River, by him named Alexandria. Description of the River Jaxartes.

Genghizcan having entrusted the Management of this Expedition to Prince Touschi, he sent him Orders, so soon as he was inform'd of the reducing of Otrar, to besiege the Cities of Saganac, Junde, and the others of which they must become Masters before they could undertake the Conquest of Transoxiana. At the same time he sent to him Elac Nevian, a most experienced Captain, to serve him as Lieutenant General, with Orders to take with him twenty thousand Men of the Troops that had been at the Siege of Otrar, to the end that Touschi might might have two Armies, and so be in a condition not to fear any thing.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Mirconde.

Touschi began his Expedition with the Siege of Saganac; and the Emperor having forbid him to use Force in those Places which he could reduce by fair means, he endeavour'd to gain the Inhabitants of this City, by persuading them to avoid the Miseries that a Siege is always attended with. For this purpose he chose an Officer, in whom he placed much Confidence, and who had been long known to the People of that Country, by having had Commerce with them in times past. This Officer, who was called Hagi Hassan, did not forget to take Measures for his own Security before he enter'd this City, and the Governour first gave him his Word that he should be kindly received. When he was come into the City, he desired that the principal Inhabitants should meet together with the Governour, that he might make known to them the Purport of his Commission, which was granted him; the most considerable Persons of the City repair'd to the Place appointed, follow'd by a great many of the People.

Hassan first represented to them in pompous Terms the Greatness of his Master Genghizcan, the Conquests he had gain'd, the great Advantages they would reap by being his Friends, and the Dangers they would expose themselves to in drawing his Hatred upon them. He likewise assured them of the sweet Temper and Generosity of Prince Touschy his General, from whom he came to offer them the Emperor's Friendship; and assur'd them they should be treated with all the Gentleness imaginable, if they would put the City into his Hands.

He

He had not time to say any more. The Proposal of yielding up the City so displeased them all, that they interrupted him. The chief Officers whose Tempers were naturally haughty, and who did not desire to change their Master, rudely stopp'd his Mouth, and caused a great Tumult, the People seconding them; nay, even the Garison join'd with them, and they said a thousand abusive things to the Prince's Envoy. The Disorder was so great, that the unfortunate Hassan was torn to pieces by the enraged Populace. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

The News of this barbarous Action much afflicted Touschican, who detested the Inhumanity of this People. He excited his Soldiers to revenge it, and made them swear that they would never sheath their Swords till the City was in their power, and they had punished the traitorous Murderers. The Siege was undertaken with incredible Alacrity. They attack'd the City with great Fury, and the Besieged defended it with equal Bravery; and knowing they could not hope for any Mercy, they fought as Men who were desperate. But notwithstanding their Valour and Obstinacy the Place was taken, and the Moguls plunder'd it, and kill'd all the Officers and Soldiers which garison'd it; nor did they spare the principal Inhabitants, and more than one half of them paid with their Blood for Hagi Hassan's Murder. The City had been razed to the ground if they had not had occasion to keep it, in order to prosecute the War; and only the necessity of preserving it for their own use, caused them to pardon the rest of the Inhabitants. But as a publick Testimony of Respect to the Officer's Memory, who, contrary to the Law of Arms, was torn to pieces, Prince Touschi caused a most mag- Mirconde. Mirconde in Rozet Assafa.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

magnificent Mauſoleum to be erected in the moſt eminent Place in the City, and order'd moſt pompous Funeral Rites to be perform'd according to the Cuſtom of the Mahometans, becauſe Haſſan made Profeſſion of their Religion, being of the Sect of Schafais [9]. After which, Touſchi left in Saganac a Gariſon to awe them, and led his Army, loaden with the Spoils they had gotten there, into the Province of Fergane.

He had loſt before Saganac abundance of Men more than ſuch a Place was worth; but he was obliged to revenge Haſſan's Death. And this puniſhing theſe People ſo ſeverely produced a good Effect, becauſe ſeveral Towns in that Country fearing to ſhare the ſame Fate, took great care not to irritate the Conqueror, but yielded without any Reſiſtance. [1] Uzquend itſelf, a Place which would for ſome time have put a ſtop to the Moguls Conqueſts, did not think fit to ſtand a Trial with them: and the Inhabitants oppoſed the Gariſon who pretended to defend it, and in ſpight of the Governour, ſent Deputies to the Prince, who was then two Days Journey from the City, not doubting but their ſubmitting themſelves would pleaſe him; and in truth things anſwer'd their Expectation. The Governour finding himſelf not able to reſiſt all the Inhabitants of the City, and the Moguls together, went out of it, and the greateſt part of the Gariſon follow'd him. They haſten'd their March, for fear of being ſeized if they were followed, and they [9] The Sect of Schafais was one of the four pretended Orthodox Sects, by the Mahometans called Sunnis.

Mirconde.

[1] Uzquend, or Urquend, was ſituate in the forty fourth Degree of Latitude.

took

took the Road of Toncat, otherwise called Fenaket, whither they retired. Their retreating deliver'd Uzquend from all the Misfortunes of War; becauſe Touſchican had regard to the Inhabitants Submiſſion, and receiv'd their Deputies very favourably. He only took out of the City ſome Proviſions and other Neceſſaries for his Army, without ſuffering the leaſt Injury to be done them, and puniſh'd every Soldier that dared to take any thing by force. He would not even ſuffer his Troops to make any long ſtay in the Neighbourhood of Uzquend, out of Complaiſance, but marched directly to Alſchaſche, where all thoſe who were willing to ſhow their Love to the Sultan join'd the Gariſon. All theſe People together defended that City ſo bravely, that it was not taken without a great Effuſion of Blood. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Alſchaſche was a very beautiful City, and every Houſe had a Garden well water'd. It was ſituate near the River Jaxartes, at four Days Journey from the City of Cogende. So ſoon as Touſchican had reduced it, he marched his Army towards Junde, a City ſituate on the Borders of Turqueſtan, and at a ſmall diſtance from the River Jaxartes. Several learned Men having lived in this Place, have render'd it famous. It was out of this City, and ſome others in this ſame Country, (according to Mirconde's report) that twenty Scythian Ambaſſadors went to meet Alexander, hearing the Fame of his great Victories; and reproach'd him of being too ambitious, praying him if he were a God to ſhew it by doing good to Men, and if but a Man, to reflect on the Uncertainty of his own Condition, inſtead of proceeding farther with deſign to rob them of their Goods and Quiet. The Governour who commanded Abulfed. Geogr.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

in Junde at this time was called Cutluc-Can. This City and all the Country belong'd to him in property; for which reason he bore the Title of Can. He inherited this small Sovereignty from his Father, who had voluntarily submitted to the Sultan of Carizme. He was possessed of great Riches, and had promised to make a brave defence if he was attacked; but, far from keeping his Word, he did but hear the Moguls were coming, and immediately thought of nothing but how to save himself and his Treasure. He past over the River into a Desart, and thence retired near as far as the City of Carizme, which the Miseries of the War had not yet reached.

Mirconde.

Those who stay'd in Junde, willing to retrieve the Honour of their Country, resolv'd rather to perish than abandon the Place without striving to defend it. They made Provision of all things necessary to sustain a Siege, and put themselves into a condition to oppose their Enemies. Touschican sent a Captain to them, named Gitmur, to promise them all kind of good Treatment, if they would open their Gates to him. Gitmur obtained a Conference, and represented to them, first, the Murder committed on the Body of Hassan at Saganac, and the cruel Revenge it had drawn upon that People; then he proposed to them in a most insinuating manner to submit themselves to the Grand Can, and avoid his Displeasure. Some part of the People who heard him, hearken'd to his Proposals, and consented to receive the Prince into the City; but others, who were the major Part, were not of that Opinion, and it wanted but little that Gitmur had been treated like Hassan: And he had certainly lost his Life, notwithstanding his Eloquence and good Behaviour,

Abulcair, p. 18.

haviour, if those People who approved his Proposals, had not helped him to make his escape. This Officer returned to Touschican; and after having informed him of the ill Success of his Negotiation, he gave him an account of the State of the Place, as far as he had been able to discover. He had observed the Strength of the Walls and Towers of Junde in such a manner, that he judged it would cost a great deal of time to take the Place by Force, and that they should lose abundance of Men. He therefore proposed to Prince Touschi this Stratagem, to cause Bridges to be laid over Part of the Ditch, which was full of Water, saying that he might more easily scale the Walls at that Part of the Ditch where the Enemies thought themselves most secure. He shew'd to him the Places he thought most proper for the execution of this Enterprize, and assured him they should surprize the Besieged as they desired. The Prince did not altogether disapprove the Captain's Notions, but having prepared a store of Engines and Machines of all sorts for a Storm, he wished he could have made some use of them: for this reason he offer'd many Objections to Gitmur's Proposal; to all which he answer'd so fully, that at last Touschi yielded to agree to whatever should be resolved in a Council of War, which was held that same Day. Every one spoke his Opinion on this occasion, and Gitmur communicated his Design; but the Lieutenant General of the Army having another in his Head, spoke against the Captain's, rejected the Thought of rendring themselves Masters of the Town by Surprize, when they could have it a nobler way, and endeavour'd to persuade them that it was easy to take it by open Force. But notwithstanding withſtanding the Reaſons he alledged to ſupport his Opinion, all the Council better liked the Stratagem which Gitmur propoſed; and it was reſolved that to amuſe the Beſieged, three falſe Attacks ſhould be made, and all the Engines ſet a playing on that ſide of the Town which he thought the weakeſt, and that they ſhould ſeem to abandon that which was beſt fortify'd. Thus they hoped that theſe Attacks would draw all the Forces in the Town to that ſide, and during that time they might without being moleſted ſcale the Walls on the other. They agreed upon the Time and Manner, and named the Troops that ſhould be employ'd in executing this Enterprize, and the Battalions that ſhould ſupport them: In fine, it was determined that ſo ſoon as the Bridges were laid, they ſhould faſten on the Wall two Ladders of light Wood to begin the Scalado, and a certain number of Soldiers mount the Walls to faſten more Ladders.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Condemir.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Mirconde.

Gitmur, who was a good Engineer, built the Bridges himſelf as he thought fit; and when all things were ready, they began the Attacks a little before night with great Shouts, and the Sound of Timbrels, Drums, and other warlike Inſtruments. Whilſt the Mogul Engineers cauſed the great Engines to be brought up againſt the City, their Soldiers kill'd with their Slings, or drove from the Walls the Beſieged who appear'd on them to hinder their Approaches. So ſoon as the battering Rams and the other Engines began to play, all the Gariſon ran to the Attack, and abandon'd their other Poſts. Gitmur on his ſide ſo ſoon as it was Night cauſed his Bridges to be laid croſs the Ditch with all diligence, and the Men he had choſen to ſcale the Walls, paſs'd over, and and raiſed the two Ladders, one of which he immediately mounted himſelf to animate his Soldiers, who following, ſoon faſten'd ſo great a number of Ladders, that the Troops enter'd the Town, and advancing to the Gate they deſign'd to ſecure, ſeized the Centinel and Soldiers who guarded it; and making themſelves Maſters of it with little Noiſe, open'd it, and let in ſeveral Troops of the Moguls, who took poſſeſſion of the principal Places. The Beſieged were no ſooner informed that one of the Gates was ſurprized, but they were ſeized with Fear, and abandon'd the Care of the Places attacked, every one thinking of nothing but where to hide himſelf.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Thus was the City of Junde taken without any Loſs on either ſide; for the Moguls meeting with no Reſiſtance, did not deſtroy any body: which was very extraordinary in ſuch a Conjuncture. They ſpared the Inhabitants, becauſe they had not kill'd the Moguls; and they put but two or three to death, who had abuſed Gitmur in the Conference he had had with the People. But if they put not the People to the Sword, in return they plunder'd them of all their Goods. They commanded them on pain of death to leave the City, and to retire to a neighbouring Plain. They obey'd this Order with much haſte; Men and Women, Old and Young, all ran to the Place. The Maſters and Slaves ſtood undiſtinguiſhed together, waiting what their Enemies ſhould do with them; imagining they had drove them out of the City with no other deſign than to maſſacre them all together with more Cruelty. But there was no harm done them, only Commiſſaries were order'd to take an account of the number of the Citizens. After which, they left a ſtrong Gariſon in the City, and permitted the Inhabitants to return to their Houſes, where they found what the Moguls had left them, which was only what they could not carry away. A Mogul Officer, named Alicoja, who was a Mahometan, was made Governour of the Place.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Touſchican, after the Reduction of this Place, divided his Army into two Bodies, giving fifty thouſand Men to Elac Nevian, to go and ſubdue the Countries of Ilac, Alſchaſche, and Cogende; and he order'd the reſt of the Troops to keep the open Country, and facilitate the taking of Cogende, which he had received Orders to beſiege by the ſaid Lieutenant-General. Elac Nevian being provided of all things of which he ſtood in need to perform this Expedition, marched into Ilac; and to juſtify the Prudence of the Emperor his Maſter in the choice he had made of him, he reſolved to uſe all the Prudence and Skill he was capable of. As an earneſt of which, he firſt marched his Army with ſuch ſpeed, that the People of Ilac and Alſchaſche believed them far off from their Country, when they were ſurprized with hearing they were arrived in it: on which they ſurrendred many Places to them without fighting, which might have made ſome reſiſtance, and retarded the Siege of Cogende.

Alfaras in his Abulfeda.

Toncat, which Abulcair calls Daralylm [1], was the moſt conſiderable Town of all thoſe which the General Elac Nevian took before he went to Cogende; therefore he was forc'd to beſiege it to make it ſurrender. It was ſi-

[1] That is to ſay, the Palace of the Sciences, becauſe of the Academy of Arts and Sciences that was founded there.

tuate

tuate in forty three Degrees of Latitude, and was dependent on Alſchaſche. It ſerved to ſecure the Frontiers of the Province of Ilac, and was a Rendezvous for the Merchants of theſe two Countries who trafficked chiefly in this Place. The Mogul Officer judging that this Town could furniſh Cogende with great Succours in caſe he neglected to take it, and that on the contrary it would be of great Service for his own Army if he took it, and laid Stores in it, reſolved to beſiege it in form, if he could not reduce it any other way. This City was rather a Place of Pleaſure than Strength. The purling Brooks water'd almoſt every Street. The Suburbs and Country-Seats were all well ſupplied with Water; and an infinite number of Gardens full of Fruit-Trees render'd it a charming Place to reſide in. It was full of murmuring Fountains, all environ'd with many the moſt delightful Walks in the World. In fine, it was a common Saying, that God never made a more delicious Dwelling than that City. Its Situation near a River, its Walls and Caſtle, had always defended it againſt the Turqueſtan Rovers and Bands. Its Inhabitants were not frighted at the Moguls Approach. The Bey who govern'd it was ſo bold as to refuſe to ſurrender it on their Summons. He was called Ilenco-Melic, and was the natural Lord of the Place. The Gariſon was compoſed of Turks, Natives of the Country, called Cangouli, a People who had the Reputation of being very brave.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Abulfeda, p. 232.

Mirconde in Rouzet Aſſafa.

The Governour put great Confidence in them, and anſwer'd fiercely when the Moguls ſummon'd him to open the Gates; but upon the firſt Attack he retired into the Caſtle with the chief of the Inhabitants. Elac Nevian cauſed the Engines to be got ready, and gave many

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Assaults to the City. The Besieged vigorously resisted for three days; but the fourth, maugre their Opposition, he made a Breach in the Walls: at which the Inhabitants were so affrighted, fearing to be forced, that they desired leave to capitulate, and did all they could to obtain honourable Terms. But the Mogul General rejected all their Proposals, and obliged them to surrender at discretion.

Condemir in Habibessuyar.

'Abulcair, p. 19. in Taric Abosman.

When the Moguls saw themselves Masters of this Place, they made all the Inhabitants go out of it, that they might with more ease plunder their Houses. And the General Elac Nevian thinking he had reason to be displeased with the Garison, put them to the Sword. As for Ilenco Melic, he had not the same Fate; for he found means to escape before the Castle surrender'd. The Moguls, after having built a considerable Magazine for warlike Stores there, marched towards the Country of Cogende, which was a Part of Fergane, or at least border'd upon it.

'Abulfeda, p. 232.

Mirconde, p. 254.

[2] The Can to whom the City of Cogende belong'd, well discerning that Elac Nevian had not undertaken the Siege of Toncat, but in order to come to him with more Advantage, stood upon his guard. He had order'd to be brought into Cogende all sorts of Stores, both of Ammunition and Food. And so soon as he had Advice that the Moguls were marching that way, he caused the Bridges to be broken down with all speed, the Roads every where to be spoiled, and all the Corn, Fruits, and Cattle in the Countries adjacent to be carried away, with design to take from the Enemies all means means of subsistence, and to put them at least to a great deal of Trouble, if he was not able to prevent their besieging him. All the Inhabitants of the open Towns and Villages, upon the report of the Moguls Arrival, abandon'd their Houses, and sought where to secure themselves. Those who could get into Cogende, took refuge there, as being the Capital of that Province, and the only Place that was capable of making any Defence. They carried into it all sorts of Provisions, so that there wanted nothing necessary either for fighting, or maintaining those who were shut up in the Place.

'Abulcair, p. 19.

[2] Genghizcan was at this time about sixty six Years old.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Fadlallah.

CHAP. X.

The Siege of Cogende, and the History of Timur Melic.

THE City of Cogende was situate in about forty one[3] Degrees and twenty five Minutes of Latitude. It was large and well fortify'd. It extended itself along the Banks of the River Jaxartes, in a fertile and beautiful Country, which rendred its Situation exceeding pleasant. Besides, it was within seven Days Journey of Samarcande, and had the Advantage of trading in Musk and other odori-

[3] Alfaras in Abulfeda, p. 232. says, in forty one Degrees twenty five Minutes. Ulugbeg places it in forty one Degrees fifty five Minutes; Albironni in forty Degrees fifty Minutes.

ferous

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

ferous things. The fine Gardens, Excellence of the Fruits, and particularly the Bravery of its Inhabitants, made it a Place highly eſteem'd. It had for its Sovereign Prince Timur Melic, who was a Can that pay'd Tribute to the Sultan of Carizme, with whom he lived in perfect Amity.

Abulcair, p. 19.

Touſchican kept at ſome diſtance with his Army, to hinder the Gariſons of ſeveral Places from getting together to diſturb Elac Nevian, to whom it was beſides neceſſary to leave all the Proviſions that remain'd in the Country of Cogende, this General having but few Magazines there to ſubſiſt his Army. So ſoon as the Moguls were come before Cogende, they fortify'd their Camp on that ſide the River where they encamp'd, and began to get ready all their Engines. Elac Nevian knew very well that this Place was hard to be taken, and had got Information what kind of Man Timur Melic was. In truth, this Prince was not to be ranked with common Captains; he naturally loved War, and had often given Inſtances of it among his Neighbours. He had ſeveral times commanded the Sultan's Armies, and had acquired a very great Reputation.

[5] He was perfectly skill'd in the Military Art, and had all the Qualifications of a compleat General. He was juſt, liberal, familiar, and ſevere enough to make his Soldiers fear and obey him. All theſe good Qualities, ſupported with a dauntleſs Courage in all Dangers, have cauſed the beſt Eaſtern Hiſtorians to make mention of this Prince with great reſpect:

[5] His Valour was ſo extraordinary, that Ruſtan, Sam, and Aſfendiar had bluſh'd before him. Mirconde, p. 255.

They

They compare his Valour to that of the Rustans, the Asfendiares, and the Sams, who were the antient Heroes of the Turks and Persians. In reality, he well deserved to be rank'd as a Competitor with all these great Men. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

So soon as he was besieged, he applied himself seriously to assign proper Employments to all those who were shut up with him in this City: He let none be idle. He order'd the Engines to be placed where they were most useful. He caused twelve Barks with Oars to be built, to serve them against the Besiegers, and afterwards made many more. He appointed the Places where each Officer should post himself, proposed Rewards to the Soldiers, and decreed Punishments for those who fail'd of doing their duty. The Mogul General on his side, before he began the Attacks, harangued his Army. He promised to his Officers and common Soldiers to give a faithful account to the Grand Can of all the brave Actions they should perform. And when he had thus animated them with his Eloquence, he order'd them to build a Bridge of Communication a little below the City, which they executed with Success by the Assistance of their Engines, notwithstanding all the Efforts of their Enemies to oppose them. Then having divided his Army into two Bodies, he sent the weakest beyond the River under the Command of his Lieutenant, and retain'd the best Troops to make vigorous Attacks. And altho Historians do not relate all the brave Actions perform'd during this Siege, no doubt but on both sides Exploits were done worthy to be eternally remember'd. They say that Elac exposed himself to a thousand Dangers to render his Attempts successful; that he caused whole Millstones to be shot ſhot againſt the City; that the Battering Rams ſhook the Walls whilſt he was preſent; and that he himſelf fought ſometimes only to animate his Soldiers.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

As for Timur Melic, we cannot relate all he did either to burn or break the Moguls Engines, aſſiſted by his People and Brigantines[6]. He ſent ſix of his Barks on each ſide of the River. They were full of Soldiers who fought deſperately, and ſhot into the Moguls Camp ſo great a quantity of Stones, Darts, and Arrows, that they killed and wounded abundance of Men. This ſucceſsful way of fighting augmented their Courage; and the Beſiegers not being able to encompaſs the City by reaſon of a large Moraſs which hinder'd them, there came by that means from time to time ſmall Supplies of Men into the City; ſo that Timur Melic flatter'd himſelf that he ſhould be able at laſt to weary out the Moguls: but there arrived in their Camp freſh Troops ſent by Prince Touſchican. Elac redoubled his Aſſaults, and ſo fatigued the Gariſon, that they deſpair'd of reſiſting him much longer. Yet Timur Melic had recourſe to a Stratagem which much retarded the taking of Cogende. He had cauſed to be built ſome time before a kind of Fortreſs well fortify'd at the farther end of the City, in a little Iſland that was very difficult of Acceſs. This Citadel was not built to keep the Inhabitants in awe, the Prince being too well aſſur'd of their Fidelity to fear any thing from them; and therefore to take away all Suſpicions of that nature from them, he had left in the City

[6] They call theſe Brigantines in the Arabian Tongue, Queroud. Fadlallah, p. 388.

an

an Eminence which commanded this Fort. He had built it only to secure the Town from the Irruptions Strangers might make into it by this way, which lay open and exposed, because the River grew very wide in this Place. He put into this Fort a thousand chosen Men, and then sent to the Enemies Camp Men in whom he confided. These Men pretended to be Deserters, complaining they had been ill used, and were fled to them for Succour. They acquitted themselves of their Commission very dextrously, and the Moguls fail'd not to question them about the State of the City. They pretended a great Unwillingness to answer them; but being pressed, at length seeming unable to resist any longer their Importunities, they declared they needed only attack that Fort, because so soon as that was taken, the City must surrender. The Reasons they gave for this Advice had first been concerted with Timur Melic.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

In the mean while, Timur Melic, to give more credit to the Intelligence these Deserters had given his Enemies, made his Troops appear very easy. Elac suffer'd himself to be deceived, and disposed all things to attack the Fort. He found it to be very strongly built, and extreme high. The Moguls made use of their Machines, and batter'd it with all the Vigour imaginable for several Days; but the Stones and other Materials, of which they had got together a great quantity, beginning to fail, and the difficulty of getting more being very great, much hinder'd them, they being obliged to go above three Leagues from their Camp to seek for them. All the Infantry was commanded out on this occasion, and in truth they brought back with them a vast quantity. New Attempts were made to take the Fort; but but the Beſiegers being at too great a diſtance from the Walls, by reaſon of the River running between, they could not throw them down, and were therefore obliged to caſt up a Bank to approach nearer it. The greateſt part of the Army was employ'd in this Work, which was extremely laborious, becauſe of the Holes they met with in the bottom of the River, which they were obliged to fill up. The Foot-Soldiers brought the Stones to the Brink of the Water, and the Horſe went and threw them in amongſt the Earth, and whole Trees tied together, as they did likewiſe the Faſcines and other things of which they made uſe to finiſh this Work, and render it firm. Beſides the Difficulty of this Undertaking, they had the Vexation of being continually interrupted by the Beſieged, who often with their Engines, and ſometimes by the Sallies they made in their arm'd Brigantines, threw down the Bank, and deſtroy'd all they had done. Yet notwithſtanding all the Efforts of theſe brave Men who defended this Fortreſs, the Work was accompliſh'd; and Timur Melic now ſeeing himſelf upon the point of being forced to yield, thought no more of any thing but how to execute the Deſign he had long form'd in his own Mind, in order to ſecure his Retreat, and to ſave his own Family at leaſt.

Fadlallah, p. 389.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Fadlallah, p. 388.

He had at the beginning of the Siege only twelve Brigantines; but having found how uſeful they were to him, he had cauſed more to be built, even to the number of ſeventy, without mentioning his Deſign to any body. He gave Orders that the Brigantines ſhould be all brought to the moſt private part of the Shore, under Covert of the City, where he had them plaſter'd over with a certain Compoſition which was made of wet Felt kneeded with Clay and Vinegar; and the Nature of this Compoſition was ſuch, that neither the Arrows nor Fire could hurt theſe Veſſels. In the time this was doing, and he was diſpoſing all things for his retreat, conſidering that the Bridge of Communication, of which we have made mention, was an Obſtacle in his way, becauſe the Enemies might ſend over it as many of their Cavalry as they pleaſed to purſue him by going on the other ſide, and prevent his Landing where he deſign'd, he reſolved to attack and deſtroy it. This Deſign was not at that time difficult to execute, becauſe the Mogul General had cauſed to return to his Camp the moſt part of the Troops that had paſt over to the other ſide the River, and was buſied about taking the Fort; ſo that the Bridge was left with but few Men to guard it.

was

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Condemir in Habibaſſuyar.

One Night Timur Melic cauſed a Sally to be made. The commanding Officer, as had been before agreed, attack'd thoſe who kept the Bridge, upon a Signal given him that ſome Brigantines full of Tar and Naphta were got near the Pontons of which the Bridge was made, and going to ſet fire to them. The Brigantines produced the deſired Effect without Oppoſition, and the greateſt part of the Bridge was burn'd. This was done the ſame Night that Timur Melic left the City. He loaded his Brigantines with every thing he had moſt valuable, putting aboard all his particular Friends, and the braveſt of his Warriors who were willing to ſhare his Fortune, with ſtore of all ſorts of Proviſions and Arms both offenſive and defenſive, to incommode the Moguls, by whom he expected to be purſued; in fine, he embark'd himſelf, and order'd the Admiral who had charge of this little Fleet, to let it drive along long with the Stream, and to make all the ſpeed that was poſſible.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

But notwithſtanding all the Precaution Timur Melic uſed to conceal his Flight from Elac Nevian's Knowledge, this Mogul Officer was ſoon inform'd of it, and immediately ſent a great Body of Horſe after him, with Orders to purſue him cloſely, to attack him under Shore, and take him a Priſoner. And tho the ſwift Current favour'd the Rowers, and the Fleet was got a great way off from Cogende before the Moguls could overtake it, yet they came up with them, notwithſtanding the Diligence uſed to eſcape them, and in ſpite of the Turnings and Windings that the Rocks, which often obſtructed their Way on the Shore, obliged them to make. So ſoon as they were within reach of them, they hurl'd a vaſt Quantity of Darts, Arrows, and Fire at the Barks of thoſe of Cogende; but the Brigantines, which were proof againſt theſe Attacks, receiv'd no Damage. In the mean time Timur Melic, not being able to bridle his own Courage, nor the Valour of thoſe that belong'd to him, ſhot out of the Windows of the Ships a great many Darts and Arrows againſt the Moguls, of whom they kill'd many. They fought in this manner ſome Days, and one may reaſonably imagine that Timur loſt alſo a great many of his People; for beſides that he could not hinder the Arrows from entering the Brigantines by the Windows, they were often obliged to quit the Shelter of the Decks, and expoſe themſelves to repulſe thoſe of the Moguls, who ventured ſtill more by advancing againſt them into the Water.

Mirconde, p. 255. in Rouzet Aſſafa.

Fadlallah, p. 388.

Altho the Inhabitants of Cogende, animated by their Prince's Example, ſuffer'd not themſelves to be ſurprized either by Night or Day, yet yet their Enemies gave them no rest, but follow'd them so closely, that they scarce ever lost sight of them. The bloodiest Disputes were when some Rocks or Banks of Sand which were on the North side (for the River ran from East to West) obliged the Fleet to approach near the Shore on the South side. 'Twas in these Rencounters that Timur Melic shew'd himself a Prodigy of Valour. He was foremost in all Dangers, and seen in every Place where the Fight was hottest, and came generally off victorious from these Skirmishes. There was, amongst the rest, a furious Combat in a certain Flat, or shallow Place, where the River being fordable, gave leave to the greatest part of the Horsemen to approach the Brigantines nearer than they used to do. Timur had his Ships ranged in the manner he used, gave his Orders to the Admiral, who communicated them to the Pilots, Officers and Soldiers; and then without waiting for the Moguls coming to them, he went himself to attack them. There were soon seen floating on the Water a great number of dead Men and Horses; and after a rough Attack, the Moguls were constrain'd to make a shameful Retreat. Timur Melic lost in this Fight many of his best Officers and Soldiers.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Being obliged to pass before the City of Toncat, which was in the possession of his Enemies, he expected to meet with greater Obstacles. And in truth, had the Moguls reflected at first that he must of necessity pass by that Place, they might easily have overthrown and sunk his Fleet. But they thought not of it till it was too late; their Courier did not arrive at Toncat till a very little while before Timur Melic's Fleet, and they had not time to do more than faſten a Chain croſs the River. The Prince would not paſs but in the Night before Toncat, to the end that he might conceal as much as poſſible from his Enemies the Condition his little ſhatter'd Fleet was in, and to be the leſs incommoded. Nevertheleſs, the Chain ſtop'd at once all the Brigantines, and gave time to the Gariſon of the City to join on the Banks of the River Jaxartes the Troops that purſued Timur. This Prince had fortunately foreſeen this Difficulty before he left Cogende, and made proviſion of excellent Hatchets and Files; he diſtributed them amongſt his People, who tho they ſtood as a Mark expoſed to a great number of Archers who ſhot at them, began to cut the Chain, and accompliſh'd it. It is true, Timur ſupported them the while, killing a great many of the Moguls with his Arrows; but he got off with great Loſs of thoſe that accompanied him. And the Chain being cut, the Brigantines paſs'd thro, and continued their way.

Fadlallah, p. 388.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Abdallatif, p. 389.

Fadhallah, p. 389.

The Moguls, tho enraged for not having been able as yet to take Timur Melic, were not diſcourag'd, but purſued him with more Vigour than before. They were now join'd by a freſh Body of Troops, which Prince Touſchican, who was not far off from thence, ſent to cut off all means of Timur's retreating, which he had had an account of. The Moguls with this Reinforcement began afreſh to haraſs thoſe of Cogende, who far from appearing diſmay'd, ſeem'd to fight with more Ardour. Timur himſelf, weary of being ſhut up in the Brigantines, reſolved to go forth to give vent to his Courage, and die in the midſt of his Enemies. For this he found a favourable Opportunity; a Rock obliged the Enemies to go go about, and drew them a little farther than they uſed to be off from the Banks of the River Southward. This Prince took this opportunity to get aſhore with the few fighting Men he had left; and not doubting but the Moguls would all come and fall upon him, he hop'd that whilſt they were fighting with him, the Brigantines would eſcape, and might be able to carry his Family to ſome Place of Safety. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

He then went forth of the Brigantines with his little Band, taking with them Proviſions for ſome days. They reached to a Place very well ſituate, on a riſing Ground, from whence ruſhing down furiouſly upon their Enemies, who did not expect ſuch a Deſcent to be made upon them, they kill'd a great number of the Moguls. The Moguls not doubting but the People who charged them with ſo much Fury, were headed by the brave Prince whom they purſued, laid aſide all Thoughts of the Brigantines, and applied themſelves to get at him. They quitted their Horſes for this purpoſe; but they found the way to the Place he was upon ſo ſteep on the ſide they were of, that they could not get up. And whilſt they ſearch'd for the Paths by which the Prince had got up with his Band into ſo advantageous a Poſt, juſt as they were ready to ſurprize Timur and his Band by coming behind them, the Night gave him and them opportunity to retire farther into a Place ſtill more difficult to find. They left not off to ſeek him from Rock to Rock, and to continue their hopes of taking him; altho he, by knowing the Country better than they, always eſcap'd them, even when they moſt flatter'd themſelves that he was going to fall into their Hands.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Mirconde.

Whilſt the greateſt part of the Moguls were employ'd in purſuing Timur Melic, the reſt, more greedy of the Booty than Honour, followed the Brigantines, thinking to enrich themſelves by the taking of them; but they loſt their Labour, for the Fleet got ſafe into a Port belonging to the Sultan of Carizme, where all Timur Melic's Family were received with much Joy, and where they lived without any other Diſquiet than the Trouble of not knowing what was become of that brave Prince.

Condemir.

And indeed their Concern for him was not without reaſon; for he had to do with Enemies who were obſtinately bent to purſue and take him. And tho he had happily eſcaped their hands all this while, and had continually kill'd all who attempted to get up to him and came within his reach, yet he every day loſt ſome of his Companions; ſo that at laſt they all periſh'd, and he remain'd alone, and could no longer hope to defend himſelf againſt ſo many Enemies: Yet one Night he found means to eſcape from them. He ſaw but three Perſons who follow'd him; theſe three Moguls ſeeing themſelves alone, and purſuing a Man whoſe Valour they ſo well knew, did not dare to make up to him, but were cautious how they attacked him, which was a great Advantage to him; for it gave him time to get to a little Wood, where ſtopping for a few Moments to take breath, he drew three Arrows out of his Quiver, which were all that he had left, one of which had no Head. This he ſhot at one of the Moguls who was the foremoſt of the three; it ſtruck him in the Face, and the Arrow went into his Eye, and diſabled him for fighting. He who was wounded was the braveſt of the three. The two others appear'd much ſurprized at this Sight,

Fadlallah, p. 289.

Sight, which Timur Melic perceiving, propoſed to parly with them. He offer'd them ſome Pieces of Gold, on condition they would ceaſe to follow him. The Moguls accepted his Offer, and taking what care they could of their wounded Companion, returned back to their Troop. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

Timur Melic in this manner eſcaped from his Enemies hands, and eaſily got to a City of Carizme called Quent, where he was received with the Acclamations of all the People, who had already been inform'd of the great Dangers he had been expoſed to. They loaded him with Praiſes and Bleſſings. His Family came ſoon after to him with ſuch Joy and Tranſport as may be much better conceiv'd in Imagination than expreſs'd in Words. His Conduct and Valour were admired not only by all his Friends, but even by his Enemies. Sultan Mehemed having learn'd that he was at Quent, ſent to congratulate him on his ſafe Arrival, and deſired him, by Letters full of Eſteem and Friendſhip, to accept of the Government of that City, the Governour of which had been kill'd. Timur complied with his Sovereign's Deſire; and when the Moguls carried the War into Carizme, he gave freſh Proofs of his Courage, and reſiſted them ſo long, till at laſt deſpairing of ſeeing Mehemed's Affairs re-eſtabliſh'd, he retired into Perſia, where the Sultan himſelf was at that time. Sometime after he diſguiſed himſelf, taking the Habit of a religious Sophy, and retired to the Borders of Syria, where he lived privately till the Moguls had eſtabliſhed themſelves Maſters of Perſia and Tartary. Then returning into Perſia, he made himſelf known to the Prince who then reign'd, to whom he took an Oath of Fidelity, and was by Mirconde. Abulcair, p. 20.

An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile. Condemir. him permitted to retire into his own Country of Cogende.

When he was arrived there, he enquired after his Children whom he left at his Departure for Syria. He found but one alive, whom an old Servant of his Family discover'd, and whom he himself knew to be his Child by a Mark he had upon his Body. Batucan King of Capschac, the Grandson of Genghizcan, permitted this Son of Timur Melic to make enquiry after his Father's Estate, and to enjoy it. Timur assisted him to recover it; but several Moguls having got possession of it, it was not very easy to make them restore it: yet he did at last compass it, by which he made all those his Enemies who had usurped any part of his Right and Fortune. These Men found out the Man whom he had wounded in the Eye with the Arrow, and excited him to take revenge on him. And 'tis remarkable after what manner this Mogul accomplish'd his Design: One day Timur Melic talking with a Prince of the Blood who did not love Fighting and Wars, he asked Timur with a scornful Air what were the great Actions he had done. Timur shock'd at the Contempt this Prince treated him with, answer'd fiercely; Prince, the Earth and Seas have seen what I have done, the Heavens and Stars are Witnesses of my Valour, and the World does undervalue it. These Words which Timur spoke, proceeded not from Vanity but Anger, which cost him his Life; for the Mogul whom he had wounded being present, and pretending to be displeased with his Answer to this Prince, which he said was not respectful enough, shot an Arrow, and kill'd the generous Timur Melic.

Mirconde.

Fadlallah, p. 389.

The Oriental Writers have been too brief in not relating all the Particulars of what happen'd pen'd in the City of Cogende after this Hero's Retreat from it. The Esteem they had for him did doubtless engage them to relate his Adventures only, and neglect all the rest. They do not so much as tell us what sort of People they were who inhabited the Country of Cogende. They only say that the City surrender'd the next day after Timur's Departure; and that Elac Nevian, after having settled all things, went to rejoin Genghizcan in Transoxiana. An. Dom. 1219. Heg. 616. Mog. The Crocodile.

The End of the Second Book.

THE HISTORY OF GENGHIZCAN the Great, THE First EMPEROR of the Antient Moguls and Tartars.

The THIRD BOOK.

The ARGUMENT.

GEnghizcan's Wars in Tranſoxiana. The reducing of the Cities of this Empire to his Obedience. His Purſuit of the Sultan of Carizme. Extent of the Country of Coraſſana. The Siege of the City of Carizme, the Capital of that Kingdom. The Hiſtory of Queen Turcan-Catun the Sultan's Mother. An Expedition of Genghizcan to Nacſchab, Termed, and Bedacſchan. A Grand Hunting of the Moguls. Another Expedition to Neſſa, Carendar, and Damegan. Queen Turcun-Catun is taken Captive. Laſtly, the taking of Rei, Com, and other Cities of the Perſian Hircania.

BOOK III.

CHAP. I.

Genghizcan's Expedition into Tranſoxiana, The taking of the Cities of Zarnuc and of Nur.

IT is ſaid in the foregoing Book that the Mogul Emperor took the Road to Bocara and Samarcande, the Capitals of two great Provinces ſituate between the Rivers Jaxartes and Oxus[1], Countries which were very pleaſant, fertile, and full of Towns and Cities; yet there were ſome little Deſarts. This Land was inhabited partly by the famous Scythians, whom Juſtin mentions, and partly by the Bactrians, whom Ptolomy, Arian,

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 616. Mog. The Serpent.

[1] Otherwiſe called Sihon and Gihon.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Arian, and others ſpeak of. It is called Zagatay by the Moderns, Mauaralnahar by the Arabs, and is now what the Turks and Perſians call the Country of the Uzbecs.

Deſcription of the Uzbecks.

It is at preſent divided into three or four petty Monarchies, who have each an independent Prince of their own; and heretofore it was divided into many more. Theſe petty Sovereigns are deſcended from the Mogul Princes of Capſchac, of whom Touſchi, the eldeſt Son of Genghizcan, was the Firſt and Chief. The firſt of the Uzbecks who went out of Capſchac to eſtabliſh himſelf in Tranſoxiana, was Schaibec, who made an Irruption into it about A. D. 1498. Heg. 904. and drove out thoſe that remain'd of the Poſterity of Tamerlain, who died A. D. 1404. Heg. 807. Theſe People were called Ketchebaſch [2], becauſe they uſed to wear on their Heads Caps made of Felt; and their Soldiers were called Reſchilbaſch, that is to ſay, Green-Heads, becauſe they wore a green picked Cap. Their Horſes are very lean, but extremely ſwift. Their Arms are great long Bows and Arrows, Darts, Swords, ſmall Bucklers, and Coats of Mail. The moſt part of them have thick Arms and Legs, with very diſagreeable Faces. They ſpeak in the Noſe like the Chineſe; but they love polite Breeding, and willingly apply themſelves to the Sciences and liberal Arts. Their Merchants trade chiefly in the higher Tartary, Muſcovy, and the Indies. They carry thither Silks, and a great deal of Manna, which they call Scherkeſt, which ſignifies the Milk of a Tree, becauſe this Drug is white. 'Tis a Dew

Bin Abdallatif in Lubbætta-yaric.

[2] Felt-Head.

that

that falls on the Trees, and dropping from their Branches, they reduce it into ſmall Grains, which the People put up into Glaſſes for Sale. They alſo ſell Sturgeons Eggs, and ſalted Fiſh. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Genghizcan having reſerved to himſelf the Conqueſt of the moſt important Places in this Country, and above all, of Bocara, Samarcande, Nur, and Zarnuc, cauſed his Army firſt to march towards Sogdiana and the River Oxus, and paſt thro ſeveral Provinces in his way thither. The firſt City before which this Emperor ſtopp'd was Zarnuc. He ſent, as was his Cuſtom, one of his Captains to the Inhabitants of the City, to offer them all kind of Security and good Treatment, if they would ſubmit to the Conditions he propoſed to them; that is to ſay, to demoliſh their Caſtle, and ſend into his Camp all their young Men who could bear Arms, to ſerve him in his Expedition. The Captain, whoſe Name was Daniſchemende Hadgib, ſpoke to the Inhabitants in the moſt perſuaſive Terms imaginable [3]; inſomuch, that the principal Perſons amongſt them were willing to ſurrender, but the common People and Gariſon oppoſed it: ſo that the Grand Can was obliged to make his Troops come up and ravage the Countries round about this City. Then the People who were before willing to accept this Prince's Propoſals, ſent a Magiſtrate to aſſure him of their Readineſs to ſubmit to him, and offer'd to come to him; but the Emperor judged it better to let theſe People remain in the City, believing they might engage the reſt to ſubmit to him:

[3] Daniſchemende's Speech is related at length in Fadlallah, p. 361.

And

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

And indeed in a little while the Garison and the rest of the People who were retired into the Castle, resolving to defend it, as they pretended, to the last extremity, suffer'd themselves to be overcome by the Persuasions of the chief of the Inhabitants [4]. So they enter'd into a Treaty with the Grand Can, who was contented only to demolish their Castle, and bring into his Camp the Soldiers and young Men of the City.

Reduction of Nur.

After which he continued his March towards the City of Nur, situate between Bocara and Samarcande. The Name of Nur, which signifies Light, was given to this City, because it enclosed several Places whose pretended Holiness drew from all Parts a great Concourse of People [5]. The Gates were immediately shut against the Moguls, the People flattering themselves that the Sultan would send them Succours, as he had given them hopes he would; but the Governour, either thro Cowardise, or because he believed Mehemed not in a condition to assist them, or that he was corrupted by the Moguls, advis'd the Inhabitants to make no defence, and made them consent to do whatever he pleased; upon which he desired the Grand Can to send a General Officer with the Conditions he would grant in case Nur would surrender. Suida Behadeur was sent; the Governour presented him with the Keys, and put him in possession of the Place. Suida demanded nothing but some Corn [4] Genghizcan, after he had reduced this City, gave it the Name of Coutlouc-Balek. Fadlallah, p. 362.

[5] A Turcoman and Native of Zarnuc, guided the Army by a By-Road to Nur; and this way has been ever since called the Grand Can's Rout. Ibid. p. 392.

and

and other Neceſſaries for the Emperor's Troops, which the Inhabitants carried into his Camp in ſo great abundance, that there was enough to feed the Army even to the Frontiers of the Country dependant on Bocara. Beſides which, they obliged themſelves to pay to the Grand Can annually the Sum of fifteen hundred Crowns of Gold, which they uſually paid to the Sultan. This Sum they advanced to him for the firſt Year [6].

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

The impatient deſire Genghizcan had to get to Bocara, made him very indulgent to the People of thoſe Towns which he met with in his way; and what cauſed ſo earneſt a deſire in him to get thither, was, becauſe this Place was the Center or Heart of the Sultan's Dominions, and he knew that that Prince was retired thither with the greateſt part of his Riches, and therefore he made all the haſte he could, hoping to ſurprize him. But he was deceiv'd, for Mehemed ſtaid not for him, but having left twenty thouſand Men to defend the Place, departed, taking with him all that he had moſt precious, and went ſecretly to Samarcande, under pretence of putting ſome other Affairs in order; but in truth it was only to ſeek for a ſecurer Retreat to ſave himſelf.

Some counterfeit Letters which fell into his Hands contributed very much to his Flight, being thereby informed that his beſt Officers would quit his Service; and other Letters writ to the ſame purpoſe being dropt amongſt his Troops, cauſed much Diſorder. All theſe Let-[6] He asked them what the Sultan's Revenue which he drew from this City amounted to. They told him 1500 Crowns or Dinares; he made them pay them down. And thus they avoided being kill'd and plunder'd. Fadlallah, p. 493.

ters

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

ters were writ by one of his Officers named Bedreddin, who, to be revenged of the Sultan for putting his Father, Uncle, and Brothers to death, sent these Letters to him from Genghizcan's Court, whither he was retired. The Emperor permitted him to make use of this Artifice, after having got intelligence that there was a Misunderstanding between the Sultan and the Queen his Mother, and that several Captains had left him to follow that Princess. Genghizcan himself offer'd his Assistance to this Queen, and a Settlement in Corassana, or in any other Country of his Dominions which she pleased to make choice of; but she would not trust to the Promises of a Prince whom she thought an Idolater. Mean while the Moguls encamp'd in the Plain of Bocara, where they had continued all the rest of the Winter of the Year 1219.

CHAP. II.

The Siege of Bocara.

Abulfeda, p. 225.

THE City of Bocara was situate in thirty nine Degrees and some Minutes of Latitude, a Day's Journey North of the River Oxus. It was an antient City in Transoxiana, and there were few more pleasant in the East; and being advantageously situated for Trade, it drew to it the Merchants of all the Nations in Asia. The Country which belong'd to it reached from Oxus even to the Province of Samarcande, which the Antients called Sogdiana, and and was the Boundary of that Province on the North side. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Beſides the Walls of the City which were very ſtrong, it had another Wall without, which was twelves Leagues in compaſs, and ſhut in not only the Suburbs, but alſo many pleaſant Seats, and a great number of fine Farms, water'd by the little River Sogde, which ſprung from a Mountain called Botom, ſituate in the Country of Fergane, nine Leagues from Bocara. We may eaſily imagine the antient Sogdiana took its Name from this River. Abulfarag. p. 442.

In the Month of March 1220. the Moguls forced this outer Wall, and approached the City. The Yugures and the Chineſe were then in the Year which they call the Serpent. It is the Cuſtom of the Tartars to give to their Years the Names of Animals, and their Prieſts form their Predictions according to the Nature and Qualities of theſe Animals: We muſt alſo obſerve that an Age with them is compos'd but of twelve Years. The Grand Can, accompanied with Prince Tuli, encamped his Army before this Place, cauſing it to be inveſted on all ſides; and then he deſtroy'd the Suburbs, and began to beſiege it in form. Fadlallah, p. 393.

The Inhabitants of Bocara found themſelves in a ſtrange Conſternation, when from their Walls they beheld the prodigious number of Troops that ſurrounded them, and that Genghizcan commanded them in Perſon. Some were of opinion, deſirous to ſave their Lives and Fortunes, that it was beſt to ſubmit to the Enemy: But others bravely conſulting their Honour and Faith to their Prince and Country, thought of nothing elſe but how to make a vigorous Defence; and theſe perſuaded themſelves that the Place being in a good Condition, Mirconde, p. 255.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

full of all sorts of Provisions, and defended by twenty thousand Men, all experienced Troops, not to mention a much greater number of the Inhabitants who were able to bear Arms, they would be in a condition to resist the Moguls, or at least to hinder their Progress a great while: 'But, says a Turkish Historian, what did their 'Walls avail them? Whatever Forces the Be-'sieged had, Fortune was not on their side.'

Abulcair, p. 11.

The Troops Mehemed had placed in the City to defend it were the Cause of its being lost. They had for their Generals three [7] Captains, who did not answer the great Confidence the Sultan their Master reposed in them. And it must be confess'd, that this Prince made a very ill choice of his Generals. These three Chiefs, tho Men of Quality, did one of the basest Actions in the World. Fear took possession of their Minds, and without staying till a Blow was struck, they fled out of the City one night with the Troops they commanded, leaving the Inhabitants to the Mercy of their Enemies. But this their shameful Flight was justly punish'd; for as they were retiring with their Families, and endeavouring to outwit the Moguls, in hopes to escape under shelter of the dark Night, their Design was discover'd; thirty thousand Moguls pursued and overtook them on the Banks of the River Oxus, where they had a bloody Dispute. The Traitors were defeated, and almost all of them put to the Sword.

Fadlallah, p. 394

Abulfarag. p. 442.

The Retreat of these Troops took from the Besieged all Hopes and Courage; there was nothing to be seen in the City but a general

[7] Their Names were Ghuccan, Senegecan, and Guschlican.

Con-

Confusion. The greatest part of the Inhabitants said, that they must now implore the Grand Can's Clemency, and carry him the Keys of the City: and others, fearing his Cruelty, would have them hearken to nothing but Despair, and advised that all the Inhabitants should destroy themselves and City with Fire and Sword, to deprive the Moguls of the Glory and Satisfaction of conquering them. Whilst they were thus deliberating what to do, Genghizcan, who was not ignorant of the distracted Condition they were in, caused them to be attack'd on all sides; and whilst the Engines were getting ready to be play'd, all on a sudden they saw the Gates set open, as if Bocara had nothing more to fear. At the same time all the Magistrates of the City, the Lawyers, and chief of the Inhabitants came in a Body to meet the Emperor, to whom they presented the Keys, and ask'd their Lives; which were granted them on condition they should oblige themselves by an Oath not to give any shelter or Assistance to the Sultan of Carizme, and immediately to put out of Bocara all who could be suspected of being in that Prince's Interest, particularly all the military Officers and the Soldiers, whom it was forbidden them to conceal on any pretence whatsoever. They swore exactly to execute all the Grand Can's Orders, and assured this Prince of an eternal Fidelity to him.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Mirconde, p. 255.

So soon as it was known in Bocara that they had nothing more to fear, an infinite number of People, impatient to see their new Master, went forth, and Genghizcan took possession of the City. As for the Castle, which was strong, all the young People who were displeased with the Agreement made with the Moguls, were retired thither, being headed by the Governour, a brave Man, who resolved to hold out to the last Extremity, and preserve his Reputation, which was dearer to him than his Fortune, Life, and Liberty.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Abulfarage, p. 443.

The Eastern Historians make no mention of the Manner in which the Mogul Emperor made his Entry into Bocara. They only say, that he was accompanied by his Son Prince Tulican; and that having stopp'd before a Mosque to look upon it, he asked if that were the Sultan of Carizme's Palace: and being answer'd by one of the Inhabitants that it was the House of God, he respectfully got off his Horse, and walked on foot. This Action made the Bocarians think that Heaven had inspired him with Devotion; but so soon as he was enter'd into it, they were convinced of their Error. He went up into a Gallery, and without the least Respect for the Place where he was, made a Discourse to the People and Magistrates of the City, wherein he told them that they should immediately take care to find means to subsist his Army; that the Country being stripp'd of all things, his Troops had suffer'd much, and that therefore they should make haste and set open their Magazines. Then he descended, and went out of the Mosque.

Fadlallah, p. 394.

Mirconde, p. 255.

All the People of Bocara hasted to execute his Orders. They ran to their Magazines, but they found them already open'd; for the Moguls were no sooner enter'd the City, but they began to show their Power by making themselves Masters of all the Provisions. And so great a number of their Cavalry enter'd the Place, that they could scarce find room to lodge their Horses in; and all the Stables were so full, that that they were obliged to put some of them into Places very unfit for such Uses. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

A certain Historian deplores on this occasion the Fate of the learned Men in Bocara. After having related the servile Offices the Enemies obliged them to perform for them; The pretended Profanation of the Alcoran by the Moguls.

'The Moguls, says he, made Stables of the 'Libraries, they threw down the Books, and 'by an unexampled Profanation, the Leaves of 'the glorious Alcoran served for Litter to their 'Horses, and were trod under foot.' The good wise Men comforted themselves for these Disorders with the Consideration that it was the Will of Heaven, and must be submitted to. And one amongst them answer'd a Doctor who complain'd as he was talking with him, That it is requisite they should suffer Misfortunes without murmuring, since it is the Wind of God's Anger that blows upon them. All the Populace were inconsolable; and tho the Belief of Predestination generally comforted the Mahometans in their Misfortunes, yet they appear'd now unable to govern or moderate their Resentment.

When Genghizcan had provided for the Subsistence of his Troops, he retired to his Tent, where he repos'd himself for some days, to give time to his Soldiers to refresh themselves. This Prince loved to speak in Publick, because in the beginning of his good Fortune he had successfully experienced the Power of his Eloquence. He caused the principal Men of Bocara to be call'd together. The Magistrates, Lawyers, Priests, the Antients, and chief Mahometans made haste to know his Pleasure. They placed themselves round about a kind of Tribunal or Pulpit erected for him in a Field: which the Grand Can ascending, began his Oration with praising God, and a particular

Mirconde, p. 256.

Fadlallah, p. 395.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

detail of all the Favours he had received from him. After which he repreſented to his Auditors how great God's Anger muſt be againſt them by reaſon of their Sultan's Crimes, whom he accuſed of Treachery and Breach of Faith. But, added he, the moſt deteſtable Action of all he has done, and what will the moſt aſtoniſh Poſterity, is the Murder committed at Otrar by his own Order upon the Perſons of my Ambaſſador, and the Mogul Merchants. Otrar has already felt my Vengeance; and the perfidious Gayercau, who was over-faithful in executing the unjuſt and barbarous Commands of the King of Carizme, ſhall ſoon loſe his Life in the Chains in which I have kept him Captive. He finiſh'd his Diſcourſe with telling them that God had choſen him to puniſh Mehemed for all his Cruelties, and at the ſame time to clear the Earth of him and all other Tyrants. At this Period of his Diſcourſe he ſtop'd, to give time for the Interpreters to explain what he had ſaid to the Carizmeans.

Abulfarag. p. 443.

Id. p. 443.

After he had a long time entertained them on the Subject of their Monarch's Crimes, and how little they were obliged to that King for having drawn that War upon them, and boaſted of the intimate Communication he pretended to have with God, and the Authority he had by Inſpiration received from him to govern all the Kingdoms of the Earth, he at laſt came to the Point for which it is moſt probable he had called them together. He teſtify'd the Satisfaction he had received from the Inhabitants of Bocara, in their having voluntarily and without Compulſion furniſhed his Army with all things they wanted; but he added, that this Action was but a ſlight Proof of their Obedience and Good will to him, and that it was only to try them that he had order'd them to give his

Troops

Troops something to subsist with, which his Soldiers could easily have taken without asking their leaves. But now, said he, I shall require of you a much stronger Proof of your Obedience. It is my pleasure that you discover to me all the Treasures you have hid, and that you immediately put it all into the hands of my Officers. Neither is this all; I expect you do not shelter or conceal any of the Sultan's Friends, or any belonging to him. And as you perform this last Command of mine, so I shall judge of your good or ill Will to me; and this I shall look upon as an assured Testimony either of the one or the other. His Harangue thus ended, he dismiss'd them, and they prepared to obey him, tho in secret they deplor'd their wretched Condition. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Mirconde, p. 256.

The Grand Can nominated several Officers to receive the Riches they brought; but he commanded them to execute his Orders without Violence, and not to require of the Inhabitants more than what they could readily furnish. This City being a Place of great Trade, there was abundance of Gold, Silver, and precious Stones, without mentioning rich Gold and Silver Stuffs, which Luxury and Plenty had render'd very common. One part of these Treasures were carried into the Royal Treasury, the Officers had the rest, and the Soldiers enriched themselves.

The Inhabitants of Bocara had been contented with their Misfortunes, if they had been quit by losing all their Effects, because they might in time have got something again; but these poor People became yet more miserable, and their good Nature compleated their Ruin. Genghizcan, as has been before related, had ordain'd that they should not conceal any Officer or Soldier belonging to the Sultan; the greatest part of the Inhabitants obey'd him: yet some others, perſuaded that it was not difficult to evade the Rigour of this Order, neglected to execute it, and kept concealed in their Houſes ſuch of Relations or Friends as belong'd to the Sultan's Army. The Mogul Officers diſcover'd and inform'd the Emperor of it, who giving vent to his Rage, commanded that the City ſhould be laid in Aſhes. The Mogul Soldiers willingly undertook this Employment, and all Parts of the Town were ſtrait on fire, the greateſt part of the Building being made of Wood, becauſe of the difficulty of getting Stone in the Country round Bocara. Thus this great City, which in the Morning of this fatal Day might juſtly paſs for one of the moſt beautiful in all Aſia, was in the Evening nothing but a ſad heap of Cinders and Ruins. All that it had moſt valuable was deſtroy'd; and all the Houſes became a Prey to the Flames, except ſome publick Buildings, ſuch as the Moſques and Caravanſera's, which were made of Bricks.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

The burning of Bocara.

Fadlallah, p. 295.

Abulfarag. p. 444.

Altho the Grand Can had laid ſiege to the Caſtle ſo ſoon as the City had open'd its Gates to the Moguls, he was not yet Maſter of it. It is true, the Deſire of plundering the City had made the Troops leſs vigorous in their Attacks of it. The Walls were excellent good, and defended with good Towers; and the Beſieged, animated by the Misfortunes of their Country, employ'd all their Efforts to defend themſelves: yet this Fortreſs, after the burning of the City, being hard preſs'd, and attack'd by a great number of Troops, and even by the Inhabitants of Bocara themſelves, whom Genghizcan forc'd to ſerve him, could not hold out long. The Governour ſeeing himſelf and Friends overwhelm'd with Pots thrown in full of Naphta and

Mirconde, p. 256.

and Fire, and the Gate of the Castle in Flames, surrender'd at Discretion. He was made a Prisoner of War with all his Garison. They took away the Lives of all the Gebbarans belonging to the Sultan; that is to say, of all the great Officers. There were many of them in the Castle; And these, says Fadlallah, were the Heroes who boasted of being so nimble and so expeditious to execute their Master's Orders, that they felt not the Earth on which they trod. Genghizcan would not leave any thing behind him in this Country that could make him uneasy, or employ any of his Troops to keep; therefore he demolished the Castle. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Fadlallah, p. 295.

Nevertheless Bocara was rebuilt soon after Genghizcan died, by Order of Octaican his Successor in the Empire. The happy Situation drew fresh Inhabitants to settle there; and this City was as much esteem'd after its Re-establishment, as it was before its Ruin, the Country being full of fertile Plains which produc'd abundance of all good things. Abulfeda, p. 226.

The Princes Zagatai and Octai having rejoin'd the Emperor their Father before the Burning of the City, render'd him an account of their Expedition to Otrar; and he testify'd to them how well he was satisfy'd with their Conduct.

The City of Bocara was the more regretted, because all Arts and Sciences had flourish'd there as much as in any Place in the World. Several learned Men had render'd it famous; amongst whom was the learned Avicen [8]. This Philosopher follow'd the greatest part of his Studies in the University which in his time was in this City; but he was born in another Place in this Country, in a Town named Afhana [2]. He says himself that he learn'd the Alcoran and Humanity at Bocara, which he perfectly knew before he was ten Years old; and that in fine, having learn'd Arithmetick, he apply'd himself to the Mathematicks, which he began by the reading of Euclid. After which he gave himself to the Study of Philosophy, Physick, and Theology; in which he made so great Progress, that he was Master of all the Sciences at eighteen Years of Age: That after his Father's Death he went to Court, to which he was called, having gained a great Reputation; that he there obtain'd Places of Trust, and was so much esteem'd by his Prince, that he became his chief Minister; yet ceased not to pursue his Studies.

[8] Bocara, a City famed for the Sciences, where Avicen studied, who was a great Philosopher and Physician.

time

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

He died at Hamadan, An. Dom. 1036. Heg. 428. aged fifty eight Years, or thereabouts, according to the Lunar Computation made by Bencasem an Astronomer, compared with the Solar. The Orientals assure us that Avicen did publish more than a hundred Volumes both in Prose and Verse; and they say that his Works were called The Glorious Works. They also observe that he extremely loved Wine and Women.

Bin Calican in Vafyatalayan.

[2] Afhana, Avicen's Country.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

CHAP. III.

The Siege of Samarcand.

SOMETIME after the taking of Bocara, Prince Touſchi arrived to join the Grand Can his Father, whom he found within a day's Journey of Samarcand, in a Place where the Army had lain encamp'd the latter End of the Month of May. The Prince gave him an account of his Expeditions, and forgot not to praiſe the Conduct of Elac Nevian, who accompanied him. The Emperor ſhow'd all the Joy imaginable at the Prince's Return to him, and looked very kindly upon Elac. He conſulted with them about the Siege he deſign'd; and 'tis ſaid that he follow'd the Advice they gave him, and that it was of great uſe to him. Abulcair, p. 20.

Samarcand was at that time the Capital of Tranſoxiana. This City had always been held in great Eſtimation. This Place the Chineſe, who have no R in their Alphabet, called Samahania. [2]'Twas the Maracandis of Pliny, Strabo, and other Antients. It was ſeventy Furlongs round, that is to ſay, about three French Leagues. [2] In the Days of Alexander the Great it was more than twelve Leagues in Bio Arabſchah.

[2] Quarto die ad Urbem Maracandem perventum eſt; 70 ſtadiorum murum complectitur. Quintus Curtius.

com-

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

compaſs. It was wall'd round as well as Bocara when the Moguls laid ſiege to it, with this Difference, that the Walls of Samarcand were much more regularly built, and had more Fortifications than thoſe of Bocara. It had twelve Gates a League diſtant from one another. Theſe Gates were made of Iron, and at every two Leagues there was a Fort able to hold a great Body of Troops for the Security of the Place. The Walls were likewiſe fenced with Battlements and Towers, to fight under ſhelter, and were ſurrounded with a very deep Ditch, thro which an Aqueduct was laid that carried the Water from a little River in leaden Pipes, which convey'd it into all Parts of the City of Samarcand in ſuch a manner, that there was not a great Street but what had Water running thro it, or a Houſe of any conſequence without a Fountain. Beſides this, there was a riſing Ground from whence ſeveral Rivulets deſcended, forming Spouts and Caſcades of Water, which ſerved to adorn their publick Places, and pleaſe the Eye. The Inhabitants were very curious to have fine Gardens, and every Houſe had one belonging to it.

Mehemet Niſavi in the Life of Gelaled-din.

Jacut Hamavi in Golius.

In this great City there was an Incloſure called the inner City, which had four Gates, but the Walls were defenceleſs. The principal Moſque of Samarcand was within this Incloſure, as alſo the Palace where the Prince uſed to reſide.

Jacut reports, that when one went to the top of the Fortreſs to view the City, one could ſee nothing but Trees and the Roofs of ſome Houſes; which is not at all ſurprizing, ſince in this great Circumference of Land that theſe Walls encloſed, there were plow'd Lands, Fields, and an infinite number of Gardens, nay even Moun-

Mountains and Valleys. There are ſome Authors who pretend that this City was built by Alexander the Great during the time of his Conqueſts in Tranſoxiana and Bactriana, and that he gave it the Name of Alexandria. But this Opinion has little grounds to ſupport it, as has alſo that of an Eaſtern Author, who imagined it to have been built by a King of Arabia Felix, called Tobai; for that City was built before Tobai, who was of the Family of Tabateba, as Hezarfen aſſures us in his Univerſal Hiſtory of Aſia. It was ſtanding before Alexander the Great's time; and the Arabian King Tobai did only build one Gate, yet called the Gate of Keſch, on which was long time ſeen a Plate of Iron, with an Inſcription engraved in Houmarite Characters, which is the antient Arabick, witneſſing its Antiquity. Samarcand was the Seat of the great Tamerlain's Empire about a hundred and forty Years after its being taken by the Moguls; and this Prince made it one of the fineſt Cities in the Eaſt, tho it was not quite ſo large in its Extent as before. He afterwards built a City which he called Damas. During his Reign, in digging up ſome of the Foundation of the Walls, they found Medals with Cufique Characters upon them; a Circumſtance which muſt make us conclude that a Mahometan Prince rebuilt this City.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Quintus Curtius. Hezarfen in the Tangih, a Univerſal Hiſtory of Aſia. Abulfeda's Geography. Bin Arabſcah's Hiſt. of Tamerlain.

The Mogul Emperor was not inform'd time enough of the Sultan's being retired into Samarcand; for which reaſon he could not prevent his Retreat thence, nor overtake him in his Paſſage into Coraſſana, whatever Forces he had ſent after him: He therefore thought no more of any thing but making Preparations for this Siege; which he ſuppoſed would take up Mirconde, p. 260.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

up much time; and in truth, the great number of Soldiers that were in the City, the abundance of Proviſions which he had not been able to hinder them from getting in, altho the Moguls had ſeized of abundance of Places from whence they could much annoy the Inhabitants, the Strength of the Walls and the Ditch, all ſeemed to promiſe a long Reſiſtance.

Mirconde, p. 260.

Mehemed, not doubting but this City would be beſieged by the Moguls, had cauſed Troops to enter into it to the number of one hundred and ten thouſand Men, ſixty thouſand of whom being Turks, had Commanders of great Renown; and the others, ſays Fadlallah, were all of thoſe brave Tagis[3], each of whom upon an Exigence would not have ſhrunk back or trembled at the Sight of an angry Lion, or an Elephant in Fury. Beſides theſe Troops there were twenty of the biggeſt and ſtrongeſt Elephants, and ſo great a quantity of People, both Inhabitants of the City, and thoſe who were retired into it for their Safety, that the Place, tho of ſo great an Extent, could hardly contain ſo many Men.

P. 396.

Genghizcan being arrived before Samarcand, cauſed the Place to be view'd, and then form'd the Siege, giving his Orders to his Lieutenant Generals, and marking out himſelf the Poſts they ſhould place themſelves at; and when the Engines were ready, he cauſed ſeveral Places to be attack'd at the ſame time, to frighten the Beſieged. They ſuſtain'd theſe Attacks with much Courage; and ſome of their beſt Troops ſal-

Abulfarag. p. 444.

[3] Tagie ſignifies a Turcoman according to Fadlallah; but according to the Perſian and Turkiſh Dictionary writ by Nimet Allah, they were the natural born Perſians who could not ſpeak the Turkiſh Language.

lied

lied out with so much Bravery and Resolution, that they overthrew all they met with; and had already kill'd a great many of the Moguls, when they perceiv'd that fresh Troops ran from all Parts to the Besiegers Assistance, upon which they retreated in good Order into their City with a great many Prisoners. Their Success in this Sally encouraged the Besieged to make others every day, in which sometimes one side, and sometimes the other, got the better; so that in a short time a great many brave Men were kill'd on both sides. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Zehebi Samarcandi in his Intikhab Satine.

One may judge by these Beginnings that the Moguls must have experienced in this Enterprize all the Difficulties that the Besiegers of any Place could meet with from a City that was very strong, and well provided, if the Spirit of Discord had not crept in amongst the Besieged. But so many sorts of People of different Nations as were in that City, could not agree; and a Misunderstanding, rather than Fear, divided them into two Parties, one of which were for surrendring the Town, to avoid being plunder'd and put to death, which it was certain they would have been, if the Moguls got it by Storm; and the others, of which Alubcan the Governour of the Place was the chief, trusting to the Number and Valour of the Garison, rather than to the fair Promises of the Moguls, were of opinion that they should continue to defend it to the last Extremity, for their Sultan's Honour, and the Preservation of their Religion. Condemir. Abulcair, p. 20.

These two Parties not being able to unite in Opinion, ceased to act together. The Governour, who was possess'd of the Castle, fortify'd himself and Friends in the best Posts in the City: and those that were inclined to yield, seized seized upon one of the Gates, to have the Freedom of treating with the Besiegers if they thought fit, without the Consent of the rest. This Party was headed by the Cady and Mufty of Samarcand, with several Lords who were fallen out with Alubcan, and who being most of them Natives of this Country, were desirous to preserve their Estates.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Abulfarage, p. 445.

Condemir.

The Cady and Mufty were nominated by this Party to go to the Grand Can in their behalf, to try to obtain of him an honourable Composition. After they had saluted him, he asked them what was their Business. Then interceding for the rest of the Besieged, they besought him to pardon them the Resistance they had made, to which they were obliged by the Fidelity they owed their Sultan. And to the end the Mogul Emperor might not reproach them for being false to their Duty, they told him that they had not come to make him these Offers, if they had not found themselves constrain'd to it by a superior Power, which had convinced them that it was God's Pleasure they should submit to the great Genghizcan, whose Clemency they now implored, promising an entire Submission to him, both for themselves, and for all those their Friends who were in the City.

Altho Genghizcan had received the Cady and Mufty with much Civility, yet he did not grant them all they demanded: And perhaps he had refused them all, had he not fear'd that Despair might re-unite their Minds, and inspire them with Resolution enough to defend the Place to the last Extremity, which would have render'd the taking of Samarcand very uncertain, and consequently have been a great hindrence to his other Designs. He only granted Life

Life and Fortune to the Cady and Mufty who brought the Meſſage, and to all thoſe of their Party; but he would not allow any Favour to thoſe of the contrary Party, whatever intreaty the Cady and Mufty made uſe of to prevail with him to comprehend them in the Capitulation. He ſent Commiſſaries with ſufficient Troops to take poſſeſſion of the Gate [2] which they were to deliver to him, with Orders to ſpare the Lives of all thoſe whom the Cady and Mufty protected. All who were of their Party came together to them at their Return; after which they were diſtributed by hundreds in the Fields, and number'd, amounting to more than fifty thouſand Perſons. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Mean while the Governour held thoſe Places in the City that were moſt difficult of Acceſs, believing that the Reſiſtance he was able to make, would procure him better Terms than what he was otherwiſe to expect; for he very well knew that Genghizcan had reſolved to give him no Quarter, and therefore he prepared to make him change his Reſolution, or to die glorioufly for his Maſter. The Moguls attack'd Alubcan, who ſuſtain'd their Aſſaults with extraordinary Courage. For four Days they could not force him to yield; but the fifth, ſeeing they had taken all the other Poſts but that which he in Perſon defended, he reſolved either to periſh, or deliver himſelf out of the Danger he was in, by running a generous venture, which was to open himſelf and Friends a way thro the Enemies Army with their Swords. He communicated his Deſign to the chief Officers of the Troops he had left with him. They approved of it, and promiſed to execute whatſoever he commanded them to undertake. And their Circumſtances requiring Speed, and their Safety conſiſting in their Diligence, the Hour was fixt in which he thought it moſt proper for them to make the Attempt. A thouſand choſen Horſemen, who carried nothing with them to incumber them, well mounted, got ready to attend their Commander; and at a Signal he gave them, they broke thro the Moguls Camp, whom they ſurprized, and in ſpite of them eſcaped.

[2] This Gate was called the Gate of the Moſque. Abulcair, p. 21.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Mirconde, p. 262.

The taking of Samarcand.

The Soldiers who remain'd in the City being inform'd of the Governour's Retreat, loſt all Courage, and the Moguls were ſoon Maſters of the Place, which they plunder'd, ruin'd the Walls, and put to the Sword thirty thouſand Men who remain'd of the Gariſon, which had been drawn out of certain Tribes of Turks, who had before been Subjects to the Sultan's Mother, and amongſt whom the Prince of Cangouli was found, with five or ſix petty Princes. They made all People, both Men and Women, go forth of the City, whom they would make Slaves of. The Tradeſmen, who were at leaſt thirty thouſand in number, were diſtributed amongſt the Princes, Generals, and other Officers of the Army. The reſt of the Inhabitants were pardon'd, on condition they ſhould furniſh two hundred thouſand Dinars, or Crowns of Gold, for their Ranſom; and then the Soldiers were order'd to give over plundering, after they had loaded themſelves with the Spoils. Yet whatever Grief and Reſentments the Inhabitants felt to ſee their City thus pillaged, they could not but be ſenſible of ſome Pleaſure that they were permitted to live ſtill with their Families and Friends,

Friends, and to enjoy what their Enemies could not carry away. The Reduction of Samarcand was the more pleasing to Genghizcan, because he did not expect it so soon. He put the City into such a Condition as he thought fit; and after having repos'd his Troops for some time, giving Rewards to those who had deserved them, he prepared to execute other Enterprises. At this time, and without the City of Samarcand, in a Place called Gheueserai, Gayercan the Governour of Otrar, was put to death by the Grand Can's Order. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

The City of Samarcand, according to Ulugbeg, who was Sovereign of it, was in forty Degrees of Latitude, situate in the antient Sogdiana; for the Province itself, and the River that waters it, are at this day called Sogde. It was built on the South side of the River, the Water of which, as we have said, was distributed by Canals and Pipes all over the City. It ran along the Outside of the Walls of Samarcand, and render'd the Country very pleasant, and the Walks very agreeable. Its Banks were planted thick with Fruit-Trees, which yielded a great Revenue; one part of the Fruits belonging to certain Magi, to whom it was given, on condition they should take care to observe whatever past upon this River; for which reason they dwelt along the Banks of it Winter and Summer. Situation of Samarcand. Ulugbegh's Geograph. Abulfeda's Geograph.

At present Samarcand is considerable, not only because of the Advantages I have been speaking of, and of the Beauty of its publick Buildings and Market-Places, which are built and paved with very fine Stones fetched from a Mountain called Cuhac; but also because of its Commerce with Great Tartary, India, and Persia, from whence they bring all sorts of Merchandize. Jacut in Golius. Abulfeda's Geograph.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Besides, this City furnishes Indostan with the best Fruits, which they eat both green and dried. Of these the Inhabitants drive a great Trade; and 'tis from these Gardens those excellent Melons are gather'd which are used in India in the depth of Winter at the great Lord's Tables. They also make Silk-Paper in this Place, the finest in the World [5]. The Turkish Letter which was sent to the King of France in the Year 1675. by the King of Persia, was writ upon Paper made in Samarcand; and that which he commonly writes his Letters upon, is made at Esterabad, and is called Abadi. In fine, there is in Samarcand a famous Academy of Sciences. An Uzbec Prince [6] is at present Lord of this City; and tho he is not so potent as his Predecessors, yet he is much greater than the Cans of Balc and Bocara, who are also Uzbecs as well as he. These three petty Princes are almost always at war with the King of Persia, and are leagued together against him.

---

[5] Fine Silken Paper at Samarcand.

[6] The Uzbecs are Sovereigns of Samarcand at this present time.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

CHAP. IV.

Genghizcan ſends thirty thouſand Men under the Command of three Generals, to purſue the Sultan of Carizme. Their Journey thro Coraſſana. The Death of Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme.

WHEN the Mogul Emperor was going to beſiege Samarcand, he was inform'd of the Sultan of Carizme's being fled thence by the way of the River Oxus towards the Country of Termed. He immediately ſent a Detachment of thirty thouſand Horſe to purſue him; and theſe Troops being led with extreme Diligence by able Officers, fill'd all the Countries with Dread, which the Moguls had any cauſe to fear, and broke all the Meaſures of the Sultan and his Son Prince Gelaleddin. Theſe Troops were commanded by Hubbe Nevian, Suida Behadeur, and Emir Touquer, each of whom held the Rank of Princes amongſt the Moguls. The Emperor, that they might be the leſs embaraſs'd in their March, gave to each of them but one Toman, that is to ſay, ten thouſand Men, and order'd them not to go ſo far aſunder, as to be unable to join each other ſoon upon occaſion, and to live together in a perfect Union. And this is the Subſtance of the Orders they received from this Prince.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Genghizcan's Orders to his three Generals.

Zahaby in Intikhabsalatin.

'Go, said he, go with all speed, use all your Endeavours to overtake the Sultan, seize upon his Person, and bring him to me. If any Prince, Friend or Enemy, offers to aid him, enter his Country and punish him; but commit no Acts of Hostility, and do no injury to those who yield to you, and will be my Friends, unless they afterwards turn to be my Enemies. In this case chastise them severely, and give them no Quarter. And when I have taken Samarcand, I will pursue the Sultan's Children wherever they dare appear. I will even pass over the Oxus to break whatever Measures he takes. Go then and search on all sides, without sparing either your Time or Pains. Do all that is necessary for my Service, raise Troops if there be occasion; and if you meet with the Sultan in any part of Persia, penetrate into it, even to Derbende in Georgia. If any Princes oppose you in your Passage thither, force your way, take their Countries, and come and rejoin me in mine by Capschac, and by the other Roads which you will find to the Northward of the Caspian Sea, which you must bring under my Command.'

These three Generals, after having taken leave of the Grand Can, went away at the Head of their Troops in the Month of June in the Year 1220. Led by a false Report, they marched towards the Frontiers of India, and passing the Oxus, enter'd into the Country of Balc, where they made a very exact search after the King of Carizme; but not being able to get any News of him, they took Guides, and drew towards Coraſſana. The General Touquer advanced still towards India, and the two others turned short towards Herat, the Capital tal of Coraſſana. The Prince Eminmalec, the Governour of this City, a Relation of the Sultan, was ſurprized at ſo ſudden an Invaſion; and finding he was not in a condition to defend himſelf, he choſe to ſubmit. He ſent an Officer to meet Hubbe Nevian and Suida Behadeur, to treat with them. The Officer promis'd that the City ſhould furniſh their Army with all they had need of, and even pay them ſome Contributions. The Treaty was concluded, and punctually perform'd by the Inhabitants; for which reaſon the Moguls did not commit any Diſorder in the Country of Herat, and went forward, without making any ſtay, towards the City of Zave.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Herat, the Capital of Coraſſana, ſurrenders to the Moguls.

Touquer ſometime after having left the Frontiers of India, arrived in the Country of Herat, where he committed ſome Acts of Hoſtility, not knowing, or pretending not to know that the Governour had ſubmitted to his Collegues. This Proceeding obliged the People of the Country to defend themſelves. The Prince Eminmalec ſent a Man to the two other Mogul Generals to inform them of the ill Treatment he had met with. In the mean time, ſome Troops went out of the City, and join'd themſelves to the Country People who had taken Arms, which together made an Army ſo ſuperior to Touquer's, that he was beaten, and received a Wound in the Croud, of which he died. So that when the Officer whom Hubbe Nevian and Suida Behadeur ſent to inform him of the Treaty made with the City, arrived, he only ſerved to conduct the Remainder of his Army to the Place where the other Generals were.

When Hubbe and Suida were come to Zave, they demanded Refreſhments; but the Inhabitants ſhut the Gates againſt them, and would grant them none. The Moguls who were now in want of Victuals, sent to entreat the Governour of the City not to refuse them; but whatever Prayers and Offers they made him, they could obtain nothing: which so much incensed them, that they immediately prepared to take the Place, which the Soldiers did with the greater Fury, because they were promised the Plunder of it, and had already suffer'd great want of Provisions. Thus, notwithstanding all the Resistance the Besieged could make, the Moguls took the City in three days time, tho not without the Loss of a great many Men: But this Loss made them so furious, that they put to the Sword all that fell into their hands, and then plunder'd the Houses, and seized of all they could carry away.

Fadlallah, p. 396.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

The taking of the City of Zave.

Ibnelouerdy's Geography.

Zave was a City of a moderate Bigness, situate between Herat and Nischabour, in thirty five degrees twenty minutes of Latitude. Several famous Men were born in this Place.

Mirconde, p. 263.

The Moguls, after having reposed themselves for some days, marched towards Nischabour, on Advice given them by a Spy that the Sultan was enter'd there. They sent some Scouts before to observe the State of Affairs, and desired that above all things they would make it their business to learn some News of the King of Carizme, and to inform themselves whether he was still in that City, or if gone out of it, what Road he had taken, and where he could be. These Moguls were no sooner got into Nischabour, but they were discover'd, and the reason of their coming guess'd at. The People used them civilly, and deputed three Persons of Quality, who were related to the Sultan, to go to the Mogul Generals to treat with them.

These

These Deputies had full Power given them to offer what Conditions they thought fit, without the fear of being contradicted; and after having in the Governour's Name made their Offers of Submission, they promised to give all the Money that was demanded, with all sorts of Refreshments the Mogul Army had need of, and even obliged themselves to pay Tribute to the Grand Can, and not to assist or succour his Enemies. On these Conditions the Inhabitants yielded, and received no Injury; they even obtain'd of General Hubbe a Guard to secure them from the Insults of the Tartars who might come after him. What had happen'd to the Inhabitants of Herat, made them use this Precaution. All things thus agreed, the Deputies of Nischabour made no difficulty to confess that the Sultan had been in their City, but assured the Generals that he was gone out of it with design to go to the Persian Hircania, or Yrac Agemi, a Country antiently inhabited by the Parthians; which he was persuaded to do by the Prince Amededdin, who accompanied him. They added, that this Amededdin was Son to the Vizier Rucneddin, Prince of Yrac Agemi, one of the Sultan of Carizme's Sons: That being desirous to return into Persia, where his dearest Companions were, and he had been used to live, he had persuaded his Grandfather, over whom he had a great Ascendant, to retire thither, and leave Corassana; telling him that the Province of Yrac abounded with Men, and that he might easily raise a great Army there, and being assisted by his Father Rucneddin, he would be furnished with all things necessary, and soon be in a condition to revenge himself upon Genghizcan.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

But

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

But Amededdin deceived the King and himself, and could not have given worse Advice; for Yrac was not by much so powerful a Country as Coraſſana, which he perſuaded him to quit. Coraſſana contained the moſt populous Cities, and thoſe Provinces of Aſia that were the moſt beautiful and rich. The antient Aria, ſo celebrated for its Fertility, was but a Part of it; Bactriana, which was no leſs populous, nor leſs in extent, or plentiful, was another; and the antient Parapomiſa made up but the leaſt part of it, according to the Limits Abulfeda gives to Coraſſana.

Golius in his Notes upon Alfergani.

Abulfeda, p. 209.

He bounds that Province on the Weſt Side with Jurgiana, which was the Margiana of the Antients, and with the great Deſart which ſeparates it from the Province of Yrac Agemi, which is alſo called the Perſian Hircania, or the mountainous Part of the Country of Parthia; he confines it on the South with the Province of Comus, which was the Comiſena of Ptolemy, and by the Deſart which ſeparates it from Perſia properly ſo called: he places on the Eaſt of it India and Segeſtan, which Quintus Curtius calls the Country of the Suſitanians; and, in fine, he ſays, that on the North it is environ'd by Tranſoxiana and Turqueſtan.

Baceuſy's Geograph.

Some others report, that its Frontiers extended even to Sogdiana; which proves that the Country of Coraſſana was of a vaſt Extent. It had often had the Title of a diſtinct Kingdom, of which Balc had in times paſt been the Capital. Niſchabour had alſo been ſo in its turn; and in later times Scha-Iſmael order'd that Meſchehed ſhould be ſo. The Uzbec Princes at preſent poſſeſs the beſt Part of Coraſſana, and the reſt is under the King of Perſia.

The

The Sultan of Carizme having left Niſchabour, went to Beſtam, a very pleaſant and ſtrong City, ſituate in Tabareſtan, in thirty ſix Degrees twenty Minutes of Latitude. At his Arrival there, he ſent for the Emir Omar, one of the Stewards of his Houſhold, and Native of this Country, to come to him in the Caſtle-Hall. He ſhew'd to him ten Coffers which were ſealed up with the Royal Signet, asking him if he knew what they contain'd. The Emir anſwer'd, No. Well then, ſaid the Sultan, they are fill'd with Jewels, amongſt which there are ſeveral of an ineſtimable Value. The King ſaid, moreover, that no Man in the World, except two who were there preſent, knew what was in thoſe Coffers. Then he order'd him to ſee them carried to the ſtrong Fortreſs of Ardahan, which Omar immediately ſaw done. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Abulfeda, p. 207. Mehemed Niſani in the Life of Gelaled-din.

Mehemed raiſed ſome Troops at Beſtam, and continued to levy Men all the way, even till his Arrival in Perſia; and likewiſe got together ſome Troops of Soldiers whom the Moguls had diſperſed. And being in Yrac-Agemi, he ſtopp'd in Maradoulet-Abad, a Place dependant of Hamadan, where Rucneddin his Son, to whom he had given this Country, came to meet him with ſome Troops; which being join'd with thoſe the Sultan had levied in the way, made above twenty thouſand Horſe. During this time the Mogul Generals having got News of this King, marched after him, purſuing his Steps; and made ſo great haſte that they ſurprized him at Farzine, ſome little time after he was gone out of Maradoulet. They cut to pieces the beſt part of his Army, and the Remainder fled. Rucneddin himſelf fled as far as the Frontiers of Quirman. Yet the Sultan eſcap'd Jacut in Golius. Fadlallah, p. 396.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

ſcaped from the Moguls, and retired by ſeveral By-ways with a ſmall number of Officers into Guilan, and from thence to Eſtedad, a Place much eſteem'd for its Situation, the ſtrongeſt City of Mazandran, and the moſt difficult to beſiege, becauſe an Army could not come near it but by very narrow Paſſages. He ſo well concealed the Place of his Retreat from his Enemies, that they were obliged to ſend out Parties on all ſides to get News of him: But at laſt a Lord of that Country, to be revenged on the Sultan, who had put his Uncle to death, headed a ſmall Detachment of Moguls, and at laſt diſcover'd the Way the Prince had taken. Then he advanced almoſt to Eſtedad, where ſome Peaſants told him that the King of Carizme was in a Town near the Caſpian Sea, where he every day aſſiſted at the publick Prayers which the Imam made in the Moſque at the uſual Hours. One Hiſtorian writes that this unfortunate Sultan melted into Tears when he heard the Alcoran read, and that he made many ardent Vows to Heaven, and promiſed with a loud Voice, punctually to obſerve theſe Vows, and to govern his People with as much Gentleneſs as Equity, if God would deliver him out of the Danger he was now in, and that he ſhould ſee himſelf re-eſtabliſhed in his Throne.

Mean time the Moguls, conducted by the Traitor who ſerved for a Guide to them, beſet the Town where they were inform'd the King was, yet they miſſed of him: for he being upon his guard, had provided a Bark ready equipp'd on the Sea-ſhore, to throw himſelf into in caſe of need; and accordingly he embark'd on the firſt notice given him of the Enemy's Approach. This News was brought him him by a faithful Subject, who would not suffer his Prince to fall into the Moguls hands: But it was full late when he received this Advice; for all that he could do was to reach the Seashore, and to get into the Ship, and he had but just weigh'd Anchor when the Enemies appear'd upon the Shore, from whence perceiving they had miss'd of their Prey, they vainly shot a great quantity of Arrows after him. There were some Tartars who even threw themselves into the Sea, and swimming after him, were swallow'd by the Waves. This miserable King being reduced to this Extremity, as if his Misfortunes were not sufficient alone to overwhelm him, fell into a Pleurisy, which grew so violent, that he was obliged to stop at an Island called Abiscon. There, notwithstanding all the Ills he suffer'd, his Sentiments were divided which to chuse, Life or Death: 'Is it 'possible, said he, that of all the Countries I 'possess'd, there is no more remaining but two 'Cubits Length to hold my Body? How un-'certain a Dwelling is the World, and how 'little ought those who inhabit it to put their 'trust in this Life, in which one is exposed 'to so many Misfortunes?' He abandon'd himself to these sad Reflections, and was not capable of tasting any Joy but only that of seeing himself securely landed on this Island.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent. Mehemed Nisavi's Life of Gelaled-din.

In reality the Moguls did not imagine that he would land in a desart Island, but believed that he put to Sea with design to retire into the Country of Carizme, or to some neighbouring Prince. For this reason Hubbe Nevian and Suida Behadeur having received Information of the Sultan's Flight, gave the Grand Can notice of it, who fail'd not to have him search'd for all all over the Kingdom of Carizme, and in every Place where he thought it probable he was.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

During this time Mehemed, whatever Care his Officers took to divert him, was even buried in a profound Melancholy; yet to ſhow that he was ſenſible of their Zeal and Fidelity, he confer'd Imployments upon them, which his Succeſſor permitted them to enjoy. For this unfortunate King died in this Iſland Abiſcon of his Pleuriſy, which his Phyſicians could not cure, tho they employ'd all the Secrets of their Art.

Niſavi, p. 52.

A few days before his Death, the Prince Gelaleddin, having been inform'd that he was in this Iſland, came ſecretly thither with two of his Brothers. The Sultan, who expected them, ſeeing them arrived, ſaid to him, 'Prince, you 'are the Perſon who amongſt all my Children 'are moſt able to revenge me on the Moguls; 'therefore I revoke the Act I heretofore made 'at the Requeſt of the Queen my Mother in fa'vour of my Son Coutbeddin.' Then he appointed Gelaleddin to be his Succeſſor in the Empire; and he commanded the other Princes his Sons to obey their Brother, as being their rightful Lord and Maſter, which they promiſed to do. At the ſame time he gave him his Sword, and ſent him away to look after the Affairs of the State; after which he expired under the Covert of a little Tent which had been ſet up for him. Schamſeddin Mahmoude, firſt Gentleman of his Bed-chamber, waſh'd his Body, and wrapp'd it in a Shirt, having no other Linen to bury it in. This was the End of this mighty King, who was buried in this Iſle as meanly as one of the pooreſt Mahometans.

Death of Mehemed King of Carizme.

Fadlallah, p. 397.

But ſome Years after, the Sultan Gelaleddin had his Bones taken up, and carried with great Pomp into the Fortreſs of Ardahan.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

CHAP. V.

The Siege of the City of Carizme, Capital of the Kingdom of that Name. The Adventures of the Queen Turcan-Catun, the Mother of the King of Carizme.

WHILST these things past in the Isle of Abiscon, Genghizcan, who was at Samarcand, order'd the three Princes his eldest Sons to go and conquer the Kingdom of Carizme; and to enable them to do it, he gave them the one half of his Troops, with equal Power to act, as he had done to Octai and Zagatai, when he sent them to Otrar after the Battel of Caracou. He was of opinion that several Generals, and particularly Brothers, acting in concert, must have better Success than if the sole Power was lodg'd in one Person; but Experience afterwards convinced him he was mistaken. As for himself, he resolved so soon as the Princes were on their march, to go by small Journeys into the Country of Transoxiana, which was not yet reduced, and to besiege what Cities he thought proper, till he received News of Sultan Mehemed. Abulcair, p. 21.

The Country of Carizme is that which Ptolomy call'd Chorasmia. It had Transoxiana on the East, Corassana on the South, and was separated from both these Provinces by Deserts; on the North it had Great Tartary, and on the West the Caspian Sea, which several of the Eastern Geographers do call the Lake of Carizme.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Abulfeda's Geograph.

rizme: On this ſide alſo there were ſome other Countries of the Turks. The Capital City was alſo called Carizme, ſince called Corcange by the Perſians, and Orcange by the Moguls. It was about ſix ſmall days Journey from the Caſpian Sea, and ſituate on the Weſt ſide of the River Oxus, in the forty ſecond Degree of Latitude. All the Extent of the true Country of Carizme was but from the thirty ſeventh to the forty ſecond Degree of Latitude, and from the ninety ſecond Degree of Longitude to the ninety ſixth incluſive; that is to ſay, that it was not above ſeventy two Leagues from the Eaſt to the Weſt.

Mehemed Niſavi's Life of Gelaleddin.

The Conveniencys great Rivers afford, generally invite People to dwell in Places near them. The moſt conſiderable Part of this little Kingdom was in the Neighbourhood of the River Oxus. The Cities one beheld on the Borders of this River were all built of Brick, and very near to one another. Some of thoſe on the South ſide were very beautiful. Thoſe that were fartheſt up in the Country appear'd leaſt conſiderable. The Name of Carizme was likewiſe given to Tranſoxiana, and to many other Provinces in which were many fine Governments. This Country abounded with learned Men, who were skill'd in Philoſophy and all Sciences. Poetry then reigned there; and there were few Orientals more polite than theſe. They apply'd themſelves much to Muſick, or were rather naturally Muſicians; and an Expreſſion concerning their Children became cuſtomary in the Levant, that they diſcover'd ſomething of Muſick even in their crying.

The Princes Touſchi, Zagatai, and Octai having received the Orders of the Grand Can their Father, cauſed the greateſt part of the

Pre-

Preparations for the Expedition on which they were going, to be made in Samarcand; so that they soon got together a very great number of Carts loaden with Provisions and warlike Stores, as combustible Matter for burning, Battering-Rams, and Engines, all ready for use. Genghizcan had always much Confidence in his good Fortune, and trusted much to the Number and Valour of his Troops. He order'd the Princes first to besiege the Capital of Carizme, to the end they might frighten the rest of the Cities, and by that means render themselves Masters of that Kingdom at one Blow. He fail'd not to take all necessary care to bring this Enterprize to effect; because he was perswaded that the City of Carizme would make a vigorous Defence, it being the Place the Sultan most valued, and also because the Queen Turcan-Catun his Mother had always, since the Death of King Tekisch her Husband, lived there. And 'tis certain this Princess, to whom the Sultan had entirely left the Government of this Country, extremely loved the City of Carizme, and always kept it well provided, and in a very good Condition.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Fadlallah, p. 397.

Mehemed Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin.

This Queen was the Daughter of a Turkish King named Harqueschi, and the Father of Sultan Mehemed espoused her with all the Pomp and Ceremony used at the Marriages of the Daughters of the greatest Kings. The Turkish King outlived his Son-in-Law, but dying after, and leaving no Male Issue, the People who were his Subjects almost all went to Sultan Mehemed his Grandson, who fail'd not to improve this Opportunity to extend the Bounds of his Empire far among the Turks. For these reasons Turcan-Catun had almost an absolute Authority in her Son's Dominions, who was not con-content to make her abſolute Miſtreſs of the Country of Carizme only, but gain'd very few Conqueſts without preſenting her with ſome part of them.

An Account of the great Queen of Carizme, Turcan-Catun.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

She had for her Secretaries of State ſeven of the moſt able Men of the Age. She had the Title given her of Codavende Gehan, that is to ſay, the Lady of the World; and her Power was ſo well eſtabliſh'd in the Empire, that when there came double Orders, one from Mehemed, and the other from her on the ſame Subject, they only look'd on the Date, and thoſe Orders that were laſt dated were executed without Scruple, tho the firſt Orders were ſigned with the Sultan's own Hand. In her Diſpatches ſhe took upon her the Title of Protectreſs of the Faith and of the World, and Queen of Women. She ſigned her Letters thus, I put my ſelf into the Protection of God alone. She writ with a very large Pen, and ſo curiouſly, that it was very hard to counterfeit her Writing. She had a ſuperiour Wit. She protected the Weak againſt the Powerful; and when any one ask'd for Juſtice of her, ſhe examined the Buſineſs with ſuch Application, that her Judgments were always right. It was not permitted any Perſon to ſollicit her whilſt ſhe was informing herſelf on ſome other Affair on which ſhe was to give Judgment. The Poor look'd on her as their Mother, becauſe they often taſted of her Bounty. She did much good in the Kingdom of Carizme.

Niſavi in the Life of Gelaled-din.

The Cruelty of Turcan-Catun.

It is true, ſhe has blemiſh'd her Memory by her Cruelty. She loved to ſhed Blood; and when ſhe took up a reſolution to leave the Country of Carizme, ſhe put to death twelve Children of Sovereign Princes, whom ſhe held Priſoners, amongſt whom was a Seljukide Prince, the the Son of Togrul the last King of that Family, whom Tekisch her Husband had put to death. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Turcan-Catun had been for some time at variance with the Sultan her Son, because of Gelaleddin (whom she hated) who was his eldest Son, and a Prince of extraordinary Merit, and whose Right it was to succeed him in the Empire; yet she had prevail'd with this King to make a Will in favour of Coutbeddin, whom she loved: and by this Will Gelaleddin was deprived of the Empire. But when she was inform'd that the Sultan had annulled it, and declared Gelaleddin his sole Heir, she threw off all the Tenderness of a Mother, and no more troubled herself about fortifying the Country of Carizme, but even resolved to abandon it so soon as she was inform'd that Genghizcan was advancing into Transoxiana.

She went out of the City of Carizme, accompanied with the Wives and Concubines of her Son, and her Grandchildren, loaden with Treasure and Jewels. The Inhabitants melted into Tears at her Departure, and all those whom she would give leave to follow her, bore her Company. She took for her Guide a Can named Omar, the Son of a petty King of Transoxiana, whom the Sultan had conquer'd. This Omar, who perfectly knew the Country, safely conducted her as far as within a few Leagues of Mazanderan. But before their Arrival at that Place, and her retreat into the Citadel of Elac, which was the strongest in all this Country, she put this unfortunate Can to death; which is accounted the greatest Piece of Injustice that was ever committed. The Authors who endeavour to excuse her, say, that she fear'd this Omar would betray her as he returned thro the Countries he had heretofore enjoy'd.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

After the Queen's Departure, there was a great Confuſion in the City of Carizme, which continued a long time. A Champion whoſe Name was Courd Rugan, a Man fear'd of many People for his extraordinary Strength, got the Government into his Hands, finding amongſt the People a great many ſeditious Perſons who ſupported him in his Uſurpation; but all the reſt abhor'd him, ſo that there was nothing but Trouble and Diviſions in the City. Things remained in this Condition to the Sultan's Death. Then the great Officers of the Prince's Council writ Letters in his Name, which ſome of them carried to Carizme, where the People, who were altogether ignorant of what was become of the Sultan, received them with Joy, and according to their natural Inconſtancy, did all theſe Lords deſired. The Lords turn'd out Courd Rugan, and ſeized of the Money he had ſcraped together, which they uſefully employ'd for the publick Service, and took the Government upon them till ſuch time as Gelaleddin and two of his Brothers arrived. But ſome of the moſt conſiderable Perſons in the Kingdom did not like that Mehemed, after having ſo long before appointed Coutbeddin to be his ſole Heir, ſhould afterwards revoke that Grant at his Death, and ſettle the Crown on the Head of another. Theſe factious Men formed a Conſpiracy againſt Gelaleddin, and deſign'd to deliver him up to his Brother. But by good Fortune Gelaleddin being advertiſed of this Conſpiracy by Ainangecan, who was faithful to him, reſolved to retire into Coraſſana. And with this Deſign he ſet out from Carizme, attended with only three hundred Horſe, Zahaby in Intikhab Salatino.

Niſavi.

Horſe, out of ſeven thouſand which came with him into Carizme. An. Dom. 1220.

The Mogul Emperor learn'd by his Spies the State of Affairs in Carizme; for which reaſon he not only cauſed his Troops to advance that way, but even ſent orders to thoſe he had towards Coraſſana, to repair to certain Places in the Deſart, and lie there in Ambuſcade, to the end that if Gelaleddin and his Brothers ſhould paſs from the Country of Carizme to Coraſſana that way, they might ſtop them. They immediately obey'd, and the Leaders who commanded theſe Troops, placed them as in a Circle round about the Deſart, from the Frontiers of Merou, even to the Frontiers of Scheresſtan. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Gelaleddin, who had taken upon him the Quality of Sultan, ſo ſoon as he ſaw himſelf ſecure from the Conſpirators, went out of the Deſart on that ſide that led to Niſa. There was near this City a Body of Moguls of ſeven hundred Men, who were poſted there ſo ſecretly, that even the Inhabitants of Niſa knew nothing of it. They attack'd Gelaleddin briskly. Both ſides fought with as much Obſtinacy as Vigour. At laſt the Moguls, tho ſuperiour in number, gave way, and were the greateſt part of them kill'd. The Carizmeans remain'd Maſters of their Horſes, Proviſions, and what Baggage they had; and the reſt of the Moguls who fled, fell into the Hands of the Peaſants, who carried them to Niſa, where they cut off their Heads. After this Action Gelaleddin retired to Niſchabour, where he gave Orders for getting together an Army: But having learned that the Enemies were on their March towards him, he went thence, and meeting a Party of the Moguls, defeated them, and hoped he ſhould Niſavi.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

meet no more; when another Body of Genghizcan's Army, much more numerous than the former, appear'd on a ſudden before him, and ſurrounded him. The Prince reſiſted, and his reſiſting coſt the Lives of almoſt all his Men, and even of his two Brothers, who were kill'd in the Crowd. The Head of theſe Princes were cut off, and ſtuck upon two Spears, and carried all over the Country, as in Triumph, which was a ſad Spectacle to all the Carizmeans. Theſe two Princes Habits were all cover'd with Jewels of great Price; but the Moguls not knowing the Value of them, neglected to take them: And ſome ſay that the Country-People, when they came to ſtrip the Dead, took them, and ſold them at a ſmall Price for ready Money. As for what relates to Gelaleddin, we ſhall ſpeak of him hereafter.

Whilſt Genghizcan's three Sons were advancing towards Carizme with a great Army, the chief Lords of the Country were not a little ſurprized when they heard they were approaching, becauſe they imagined that the Grand Can had ſent almoſt all his Forces into Coraſſana, to hinder Gelaleddin from getting an Army together. There were at that time in the City of Carizme ſeveral Factions which were all bent one againſt another. Coutbeddin and his Brothers had their Partizans, ſo that what pleaſed one Party diſpleaſed another. Nevertheleſs the preſent Danger reunited their Minds, and all the Inhabitants agreed to give up the Management of Affairs to a Lord of that Country, named Himartequin, a Relation of the Queen. He was known to be wiſe and valiant, and of no Party. He uſed all his utmoſt Diligence to put the Country into a Poſture of Defence. He particularly applied himself to furnish the Town with Provisions and warlike Stores, bringing into it all things necessary to sustain a Siege: And besides the Garison, he caused a great many brave Men to come into the City. In fine, he forgot nothing that could contribute to the Preservation of the City and Country. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

ture

Yet the Moguls used so great a Diligence, that they surprized those who, fearing a long Siege, were gone out of the City to get more Provisions from the neighbouring Towns. The Moguls Van-guard, led by Men who knew the Country well, being arrived about the Evening within a League of the City, found means to conceal themselves near a Town called Baghe-Eram, where they lay in Ambuscade, without being discover'd. They were no sooner encamped, but some Troops of Mogul Horse as Scouts, advanced even to the Gates of Carizme, where they carried away a great many Horses. The Carizmeans imagining these few Bodies of Foot were all the Moguls Van-Guard, sent out against them some Horse, with Foot-Soldiers mounted behind them. The Moguls pretending to be afraid, turn'd their Backs, and let them pursue them even to Baghe-Eram. Then the Van-Guard coming out of their Ambuscade, charged the Carizmeans so briskly, that they had not time to recover themselves; and 'twas with difficulty that one escaped: The greatest Part of the Inhabitants who were come forth in search of Provisions, were massacred. In fine, the Disorder was such at the Gates of the City, that several Moguls enter'd promiscuously with those they pursued.

The wise Himartequin by his Prudence soon restored all things to good Order, and the Go-

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Mirconde, p. 237.

vernour had time enough to regulate all things before the reſt of the Mogul Army arrived. He fill'd the Magazines which were in the moſt convenient Places to diſtribute the Ammunition to the People; the Engines were got ready, and placed upon the Walls and Platforms; they put the ſeveral Quarters of the City under the Command of thoſe Officers whom they judged moſt able to take care of them; and, in fine, fifty thouſand Men were commanded to guard the Gates and Walls.

Notwithſtanding all theſe Preparations, the Mogul Van-Guard were no ſooner come up, but they inveſted the Town, and ſeized on all the advantageous Poſts; ſo that the three Princes found all things in a good Forwardneſs. They firſt view'd the Place, and held a Council of War, where the Manner of the Siege was reſolved on. All the Officers then went to the Poſts appointed them, ſeveral Towers were raiſed to place the Engines on, and all things were prepared for beginning the Attacks. And having nothing to fear of any Armies coming to relieve the Town, they made no Intrenchments or Lines. When all things were ready, the Princes ſent to ſummon the Governour to ſurrender, and to acknowledge the Grand Can for his Sovereign; which if he refuſed, he was to expect no Quarter either for the Gariſon or himſelf. He anſwer'd to this Summons like a brave Man, and inſtead of conſenting to yield to their Demands, proteſted he would be true to his Prince, even to his laſt Breath.

Upon this Anſwer the Moguls made a general Attack. There was nothing to be heard in every Quarter of the City but the Noiſe of the Engines, nor ſeen, but whole Clouds of Arrows, and Darts mix'd with Fire. The Moguls guls endeavour'd to frighten the Besieged, and to reduce them at one Blow to ask for Peace. But the Carizmeans sustain'd the Assault with a Constancy that made the Besiegers sensible they had to do with braver Men than those they had met with in other Places which had surrender'd, and that they should not carry this Place without much Trouble; yet the Moguls, far from being despirited, repeated their Attacks several times, and were always received with the same Bravery as at first. One cannot sufficiently praise the Courage with which the Besieged defended themselves. If the Men, who ran boldly to every Place where the Danger was greatest, and appear'd indefatigable and dauntless, are worthy Commendation; the Women no less deserve our Admiration, who were equally courageous. They were not contented to employ themselves only in succouring those who were doing their Duty, but they mounted on horseback, and put themselves amongst the Troops which sallied forth. We need not be surprized at this, because the Women of Turquestan, and the Countries adjacent, draw the Bow, and shoot as well as the Men, ride as dexterously, and can sit on horseback as long as they. Tho they apply themselves to Arms, and consequently are obliged to be with all sorts of Men, yet they are very chaste; and it is a rare thing to find one who is not true to her Husband: nor does this Exercise hinder them from performing all the Duties required in the Management of their Affairs at home.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

The Besieged and the Besiegers continued a long time to combat with equal Vigour. They profusely spent their Arrows and Darts, and the number of Men kill'd on both sides cannot be be told. At length the Sallies and Attacks were so frequent and so obstinate, that the Moguls wanted Stones to supply the Engines; and having at last nothing left to annoy their Enemies, saw themselves obliged to batter the Town with great Pieces of the Trunks of Mulberry-Trees, with which this Country abounded. They had them saw'd asunder, fit to be put into their Engines, which did not prove of much use to them. Neither did the Besieged talk of surrendring to them; for besides the vigorous Resistance they made, the Ditches round their City were very wide, and very deep, and the River fill'd them with Water. The Princes believing this Place would be as easy to take as the others, were willing to spare their Soldiers the Time and Labour of filling them up; but when they saw there was a necessity of doing it, they order'd several Companies of Soldiers to set about it. And the great Quantity of Water with which the River Oxus supply'd the Ditches, rendering their Labour ineffectual, it was resolved that the Course of the River should be turned by a Canal, in order to carry the Water off another way, which would make it more easy to drain the Ditch, and afterwards fill it up.

Mirconde, p. 269.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Three thousand Men were order'd to make this Canal, and were already far advanced in the Work, when part of the Besieged one day went forth of the City, and stole so cunningly along the Side of the River under the Covert of the Trees and Reeds that grew there, that they surprized the Workmen, made a great Slaughter of them, and retired back into the City before the Moguls came up, who ran from all Parts at the Report of this Disturbance, and had only the Vexation of seeing their Companions dead, dead, or lying wounded in the Canal. Yet this Misfortune did not make them give over their Undertaking; others were inſtantly order'd to purſue the Work; and to prevent the like Misfortune, ſo many Troops were ſent to guard them, that the Beſieged did not dare any more to attempt to interrupt this Work. When it was accompliſh'd they turned the River into the Canal, which taking its Courſe that way, and no longer ſupplying the Ditch with Water, they ſoon found means to drain it, and to fill it up with Earth, Straw, and Faggots. An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

One may eaſily imagine the Carizmeans did not ſuffer their Ditches to be filled up, without endeavouring to incommode the Workmen; but the continual Attacks that were made to employ them, call'd for all their Care and Attention. All things ſucceeded as the Moguls propoſed to themſelves; the Ditches were fill'd up in ſpite of all the Sallies which the Beſieged could make, during the continual Alarm in which the Moguls kept them on all ſides. Then the Princes cauſed the Batteries to be redoubled, and conſiderable Breaches were made, and a general Aſſault given with ſo much Vigour, that the Mogul Standards were planted on the Walls. If this Action made the Moguls ſhout for Joy, it put the other ſide into a Conſternation. The Sight of the Enemies Enſigns ſtanding on their Walls, gave freſh Courage to the Beſieged. They ran in Crowds to the Places where the Moguls had planted them, and uſed ſuch great Efforts, that they tore them down. They even repaired the Breaches; and the Inhabitants had no leſs ſhare in the Danger than the Gariſon. Mirconde, p. 369.

On both ſides they did nothing but fight during ſeveral days, from morning till evening; and and yet the Disputes generally ended to the Advantage of the Besieged. This much despirited the Princes; and ill Success generally producing a Misunderstanding when there are many Commanders who are equal in Authority, there grew a Disagreement between the Brothers, that is, between Toushi and Zagatai, for Octai did not meddle. They both complain'd loudly of one another, and mutually reproach'd each other with having been too careful of their own Safety on several occasions, and that that had been the Cause of the Siege's lasting so long.

An. Dom. 1220. Heg. 617. Mog. The Serpent.

Fadlallah, p. 409.

Whilst this Division was betwixt the Princes, things went but slowly on; so that no great Advances were made in the Siege, altho they had already spent more than six Months before this Place. Genghizcan was inform'd of the Dissension that reign'd among his Children, at which he was much troubled; and after having seriously consider'd what to do, he resolved to take the Command of the Army from the two Princes who were most in fault, and to give all the Power to Octai, who had shew'd himself the wisest. He therefore sent Letters to them. Octai received a Ferman Hacani, that is to say, an Imperial Order after the manner of Letters Patent, by which his Father gave him an absolute Authority over all the Troops in Carizme; and at the same time order'd him to continue the Siege. The Letters Genghizcan writ to the other two Princes contain'd a positive Command to them to resign all the Troops to their Brother's Command, and to obey him. He likewise writ to the General Officers to be obedient to his Son Octai; and in every Letter testify'd his Displeasure concerning what had pass'd between them before Carizme.

So

So soon as Touſchi and Zagatai had received the Emperor's Orders, they reſign'd the Command of the Army to Octai, and ſeem'd even to have forgot all the Reſentments they had before conceived againſt one another. Octai then having made himſelf known to the Troops as ſole Commander, held a great Council of War, wherein he declared to them the Grand Can's Pleaſure; and they agreed what was to be done in order to take the Town. Every one put himſelf in a Poſture to perform the Duties of his Place; and the Officers ſeem'd all filled with Zeal for their Emperor, and Rage againſt their Enemies. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe. Mirconde.

Thus fired, they began to renew their Batteries againſt the City with the Rams and other Engines; and the Moguls being inſpired with freſh Vigour, diſcover'd an extraordinary Courage and Boldneſs. All the Sallies were now fatal to the Carizmeans, and the Beſiegers were not long e'er they made Breaches in the Walls, and mounted to give the Aſſault. The Reſiſtance of the Beſieged ſlacken'd not; they at firſt kill'd or diſabled all thoſe who enter'd the Breach; which only ſerved to enflame the Beſiegers, who to revenge the Death of their Companions did things extraordinary, ſo that the Walls were ſhaken on every ſide. The Breaches they made, gave opportunity to a great number of Moguls to enter the Place; the Outworks of which the Carizmeans were forced to yield to the Enemies, and to ſuffer them to ſet upon the Towers of the City their victorious Enſigns. The Carizmeans, unable to pluck them thence, found themſelves obliged to retire with Precipitation into the Places they had fortify'd in the City, which really appear'd to the Moguls as new Places to be conquer'd. They Niſavi.

were

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

were obliged to attack them in form; and the first Assaults were very bloody. Yet in spite of the great Defence they made, the Citadel which they batter'd without side, was at last taken, with several fortify'd Places. Then Prince Octai, to save the Effusion of his Soldiers Blood, caused the Governour to be summon'd to surrender and quit the Posts that remain'd; but since they mention'd nothing of leaving the Inhabitants at liberty, the Governour rejected all their Proposals.

Mirconde.

The Moguls, enraged at the Carizmeans Obstinacy, who still refused to surrender, tho their Walls, their Fort, and the greatest part of the Places they had entrenched were ruined, resolved to burn it all. They threw Wild Fire all over the City, and set fire to the Houses on every Side. It is impossible to tell how many People and what Riches were destroy'd by the Flames. Then the Besiegers repenting of having set fire to the Houses, which would prevent them from reaping the Fruits of their Labour, and make them no Gainers by becoming Masters of a City so full of Treasure, ceased to throw more Fire, and employ'd themselves wholly in making themselves Masters of the different Quarters of the City, fighting hand to hand. The Attacks continued night and day, and the Fatigue was so extreme on both sides, the Besieged having so entrenched themselves, that one Quarter succour'd the other; so that when one Place was forced after a long Resistance, they found a secure Asylum in the other. Having all promised to stand by one another, they shew'd such Resolution that their Enemies were amazed. The brave Himartequin, whose Valour and Prudence had doubtless much contributed to the prolonging of the Siege, perish'd riſh'd in defending a Poſt which the Enemy was ſtorming. An Arrow took away the Life of this brave Man, and ſnatch'd him away from his Countrymen, whoſe Loſs much diminiſhed their Courage. Yet they were not ſo poor ſpirited as to ask mercy from their Enemies, but defended themſelves to the utmoſt Extremity; and when they ſaw they muſt yield, they put fire to the Houſes that remain'd in the City with their own Hands; and ſo diſappointed their Enemies of gratifying their Avarice, ſhewing they knew how to render their Victory leſs pleaſing to them. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Fadlallah, p. 410.

And indeed the Mogul Soldiers ſeeing themſelves fruſtrated of the Booty they hoped for, put to the Sword all the Carizmeans they met with, and ſuffer'd their Rage to extend itſelf ſo far, that they kill'd about a hundred thouſand Perſons; nay, there are ſome Authors that ſay two hundred thouſand. Prince Octai had a great deal of difficulty to make the Slaughter ceaſe; yet at laſt he put a ſtop to it. Then they made all the Artificers, and other Men who could be of any uſe to them, go out of the City, and they were found to be a hundred thouſand. The young Women, Girls, and Boys, were diſtributed for Slaves, and all the reſt were put to the Sword. But all thoſe who were put to death ſeem'd not afraid of dying; nay, there were ſome who refuſed to live. Among the reſt, there was a certain Chec, or Superior of a Society of religious Mahometans, who was famous for his Piety: His Name was Negemeddin. 'Tis ſaid the three Mogul Princes, when they approached Carizme, heard a Voice from Heaven, which advertiſed them to ſpare this holy Perſon, and to take care that he might go out of the City in ſafety. But whether Fadlallah, p. 410. Id. p. 411.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

ther this be true or not, Octai had a particular Reſpect for him, and offer'd him a Paſſport to retire with ten of his Friends wherever he pleaſed; but the Chec would not accept it, unleſs on condition that all the Mahometans in Carizme ſhould be pardon'd. Prince Octai, who deſired to ſave him, ſent him word he ſhould have leave to chuſe a thouſand out of both Sexes to accompany him, and that they ſhould be ſpared for his ſake. The Chec rejected all Octai's Offers, and ſent him word, that having lived ſeventy Years with the Muſſulmen of Carizme, to whom he was united by his Religion, it was not juſt they ſhould be ſeparated in Death. Thus this venerable old Man had the ſame Fate as his Countrymen, and died with his Friends.

In fine, the City of Carizme was taken and ruin'd towards the End of the Winter, in the Year 1221. and of the Hegira 618. after a Siege of ſeven Months [a]. The Moguls afterwards eaſily ſubdued the reſt of the Province: Fear ſeized all the reſt of the People, and the other Cities, which were very rich and populous in thoſe days, ſurrender'd without making any Reſiſtance; ſo that the Moguls obtained in this Country a greater Booty than they had got ſince the Beginning of this War. The other Places which they took after the Reduction of Carizme, were Cat, Feraber, Dargane, Zamacſcher, the Great and Little Corcange, which the Arabs call'd Jorgiania.

Abulfarag. p. 447.

Octai Can left in the Country of Carizme what Troops he thought neceſſary to keep it in [a] Mirconde ſays the Siege laſted but five Months, which is a Miſtake.

Sub-

Subjection. Then he departed with the Army, accompanied with his two Brothers, and made what haſte he could to join the Grand Can; but he could not march far in a day, by reaſon of the Badneſs of the Roads: he was even obliged to leave his Troops under the Command of his Lieutenants. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

CHAP. VI.

Genghizcan's Expedition to Nacſcheb, Termed, Bedaſchan, and other Places.

THE Affairs of Sogdiana being ſettled, the Grand Can marched into Tranſoxiana on the Weſt ſide, and his Fame daily encreaſing, ſeveral Towns open'd their Gates to him. The Inhabitants of Nacſcheb even went out to meet him, to offer him all that they had; ſo they were quit for only feeding his Army for ſome Months, becauſe this Prince found this Country ſo pleaſant, and the Air ſo good, that he ſtaid there the beſt part of the Summer. He was informed at Nacſcheb of all that paſt in Coraſſana, and in the other Provinces ſituate to the South of the Oxus; for which reaſon he reſolved to go towards that River to continue his Conqueſts. Fadlallah, p. 416.

[a] After ſeveral Weeks march, he arrived at Termed, the laſt Town in Tranſoxiana, towards [a] He went by the Way of the Paſſage cut in the Rock called Coluga, that is to ſay, the Iron-Gate. Fadlallah, p. 412.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Abulfeda, p. 233.

Tocareſtan. Altho Termed had a great many other Places under its Government, yet it was dependant on the City of Keſch. Its Situation is placed on the River Oxus, about the thirty ſeventh degree of Latitude; and being a Place very commodious for Trade, it had a Port which was much frequented. The Sultan of Carizme had conquer'd it ſome little time before, when it was under the Government of Behramſchah, who was Sovereign of it, and whom the Sultan's Mother put to death at her leaving Carizme.

Termed, inſtead of following the Example of Naiſcheb, ſhut its Gates againſt Genghizcan. The Gariſon, ſupported by the principal Noblemen, reſolved to ſuſtain a Siege, becauſe Gelaleddin had given them hopes of his coming to their Relief. The outſide of their Walls were Bricks, and they had a Caſtle which the River Oxus defended on one ſide; ſo that they believed themſelves ſtrong enough to amuſe the Moguls till the Arrival of Gelaleddin. The Grand Can being inform'd of their Reſolution, cauſed Lines to be caſt up round it very deep and very wide. He had alſo Platforms raiſed, and appointed the ſeveral Quarters to his Army; and, in fine, ſhut up the Place very cloſely. The Beſieged, far from being daunted at all theſe Preparations, made ready to receive them warmly. In effect, for the ſpace of eleven days they defended it with all the Bravery the Sultan could expect from his beſt Subjects; but Gelaleddin not appearing to ſuccour them, and their Walls being thrown down, they could not hold out much longer. So the Moguls took the Place by Storm, and made the Beſieged pay dearly for the Blood of their Companions whom they had kill'd. All the Gariſon and the Inhabitants habitants, except some young People who were reserved for Slavery, felt the Fury of the Besiegers, whom Avarice render'd more cruel in this Place than they had been elsewhere; for a Soldier having ripp'd up the Belly of a Woman to search for a Pearl she had swallow'd, and having found it, several others follow'd his example, tho the greater part of them were disappointed, and became a Horrour to others, for having committed so barbarous an Action. The Grand Can caused the Town to be razed to the Ground about the end of Autumn; and it being unlikely that he could pass his Army over the Oxus in the beginning of the Winter, he thought it best to put his Troops into Winter Quarters, both in the Places that were under his Obedience, as also in those which he might with little trouble reduce. He accordingly distributed all his Forces into Transoxiana. The Tartars whom he sent out on all sides in Parties, made terrible Ravages, and principally in the Towns of Languerte and Samande, which had received Genghizcan with regret, and were so imprudent as to let him know it. They were not content to take out of these Places all sorts of Forage and Ammunition, but they also burnt what they left, and committed all sorts of Disorders that can be imagined.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Fadlallah, p. 317.

As for the City of Bedacschan, which had freely open'd its Gates to him, it was not so ill treated; it cost them only their Riches. The Moguls pillaged them of a great quantity of Hyacinths and Rubies, with which this City abounded, its Territories being full of Mountains out of which they got these precious Stones. It also produced fine Azure, good Bezoar, and what is called the fine Chrystal of the Levant. The People who inhabited here were those whom Ptolomy calls Comedi, and its Situation was on the Confines of India and of Tocareſtan.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Quintus Curtius.

It was in this Country that Alexander the Great ſaw thirty young Sogdian Lords going chearfully to die, who ſung and rejoiced as they were going to Execution; and demanding from whence their Joy proceeded, they anſwer'd, that the Honour of dying, and being reſtored to their Anceſtors, by the Command of a King who was the Conqueror of all Nations, was the Cauſe why they rejoic'd, and bleſs'd ſo noble a Death. Alexander gave them their Lives, and asked them what Security they would give him of their Fidelity to him; they anſwer'd, they had no other to give than the Lives he had granted them, which they ſhould always be ready to ſurrender to him whenever he demanded them: nor did they break their Words. Four of theſe Sogdians he put into his own Life-Guards, who were as faithful to him as his Macedonians who loved him moſt.

CHAP. VII.

The Moguls Hunting.

Mirconde, p. 370.

Enghizcan being at Termed in the midſt of the Winter, a Seaſon of the Year that hinder'd him from proſecuting the War, he reſolv'd to have a great Hunting-match, to keep his Soldiers in Action. In order to which, Prince Touſchican the Maſter Huntſman of the Empire, being being abſent, he commanded the Nevian his Lieutenant to prepare all things neceſſary for hunting, and to extend the Chace as far as the Country they were in, and the remaining Part of the Winter would permit. The Nevian perform'd the Duty of his Employment, and took care to give notice to the Huntſmen. He directed them what Circumference of Ground they muſt encompaſs, and ſent them away poſt to mark out the Bounds of it. After which, he order'd the Officers of the Army to follow the Huntſmen at the Head of their Troops, as ſoon as they could, and to go and take up their Quarters, that they might be in a readineſs for the Chace, according to the known Orders which had been preſcribed by the Emperor when he publiſhed the Laws concerning Hunting, and regulated the Manner of it. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

So ſoon as the Officers had led their Soldiers to the Rendezvous, they ranged them round the Place encompaſs'd in the manner of a thick Hedge, ſometimes doubling the Ranks about the Circle which the Huntſmen had marked out, by the Moguls called Nerke. They neglected not to tell them, tho no Perſon was before ignorant of it, that it was as much as their Lives were worth to let the Beaſts eſcape out of the Ring, which was about four Months March in Circumference, and encloſed a very great number of Groves and Woods, with all the Beaſts that lived in them. The Center of this great Encloſure, whereto all the Beaſts muſt retire, was a Plain which the Huntſmen had choſen and marked out. Marrakeſchy.

The Officers of the Chace immediately diſpatched Couriers to the Lieutenant General of the Chace, to give him an account how things were diſpoſed, and to know of him the Orders given given for their marching. The Lieutenant went himſelf to receive them from the Grand Can, and afterwards gave them to the Couriers, who immediately departed to carry them to the Hunting-Officers, after having well obſerved where the King's Quarters were, that they might more eaſily find them when they ſhould be ſent back thither again: Tho the King's Quarters were not fixed to be always in one Place, for he muſt advance according as his Troops moved; but as they always moved on in the ſame Line, whatever Change of Place there was, yet one could not chuſe but find him.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Abulfarag. p. 447.

The Couriers had no ſooner brought the Orders to the Hunting-Officers, but they communicated them to the Captains. Then the Kettledrums, Trumpets, and Horns ſounded the general March, which being heard throughout the Circle, the March began every where at the ſame time and in the ſame Order; that is to ſay, the Soldiers marched very cloſe together, and always towards the Center, driving before them the Beaſts, like Shepherds driving their Flocks. They had their Officers behind, who obſerved them; and they were all well armed, as if they had been going on ſome martial Expedition. Yet altho they had their Helmets of Iron, their Croſslets of Leather, and their Bucklers of Wicker, with their Scimeters, Bows, and Quivers full of Arrows, Files, Hatchets, Clubs, Cords, and every thing even to the Thred and Pack-needle; it was forbidden them to kill or wound any Animal, whatever Violence the Beaſts offer'd to them. There were ſevere Puniſhments decreed to thoſe who ſhould make uſe of their Arms againſt the Beaſts: It was only only permitted them to shout and hollow, to fright and hinder them from passing the Enclosure, for the Emperor had so ordain'd. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Arabſch. Hiſt. of Tamerlain.

Thus they marched every day, hunting the Beasts towards the Center, and encamped every night. The military Duty was not neglected for all this. The Watch-word was given every evening, and there were Troops order'd to keep guard, and Centinels, who were duly reliev'd by others. Those who slept, or did not exactly perform their Duty, were punish'd. They were sometimes alarm'd on purpose. In fine, all that is practised in War was here punctually observed.

The March was not interrupted by any Difficulty for some Weeks; but a River which the Troops from some of the Quarters could not ford, hindering them, they made a halt, and gave notice to the rest, to the end they might always march in the same Order together. Those who were obliged to pass the River, drove the Beasts over it, which swam cross; and then pass'd it themselves upon round Pieces of Hides, which they bound together with Cords. Several Soldiers being seated on one of these Bundles of Leather, each of which was tied to a Horse's Tail, the Horse drew it cross the River, following a Person who swam before. Jouini in Gehanguscha.

Having thus pass'd over this River, their March was no more interrupted, but they went always in an equal Distance from the Center. And now the Circle lessening, the Beasts began to find themselves press'd; and, as if they had been sensible that they were beset, some ran amongst the Mountains, others into the Valleys that were most obscure; others, without minding to go in the Paths and Roads, rush'd Zeheby in Taric Alcoulafa.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

into the Foreſts and Thickets, from whence they ſoon after fled, ſcenting the Huntſmen, flying elſewhere to ſeek a ſecurer Shelter. The Holes and Burrows were all filled; but they retreated thither in vain, for they open'd them with Spades or Mattocks, and even made uſe of Ferrers: ſo that the Beaſts finding themſelves ſo preſs'd, were obliged to come out and go farther. But wanting room, the Compaſs of Ground ſtill growing leſs and leſs for them, the different kinds of Beaſts began to mix with one another, ſo that ſome became furious, and toil'd the Soldiers greatly; and it was not without much trouble that their Shouts, and the Sound of the ſeveral Inſtruments drove them away.

A great number of Beaſts being fled to the Mountains, Parties of Huntſmen and Soldiers were detached to drive them thence; which was not done without much Difficulty, they often reſiſting, and it being not permitted the Soldiers to wound them. Other Parties deſcending the Precipices, which ſerved for a Retreat to ſome certain Animals, had no leſs trouble to put them to flight; yet there was not a Cave or Wood in which they left one Beaſt. During this time, the Couriers went continually from every different Quarter to advertiſe the Grand Can of all that paſt in the Chace, and to give him News of the Princes, ſeveral of whom, Huntſmen-like, ſhared of the Diverſion, which the ſeveral Motions and Confuſion the Beaſts were in, gave them in the Chace. The Emperor, who had ſomething elſe in view beſides the Pleaſure of theſe Sports, went often himſelf to obſerve the Troops, to ſee whether his Orders were exactly follow'd, and they were not remiſs in their Duty.

Cazviny in Algyaybalma clouçat.

The

The Space of Ground growing each day leſs and leſs, and the wild Beaſts being unable to get farther, leap'd upon the Weakeſt, and tore them in pieces. But their Fury did not laſt long; for being chaſed on every ſide, and beginning to have no room left but that Spot of Ground where they could be ſeen all together, the Lieutenant of the Maſter-Huntſman cauſed the Drums and Timbrels to be beat, and all the other kinds of Inſtruments to be play'd upon: all which, join'd with the Shouts and Cries of the Huntſmen and Soldiers, ſo affrighted the Beaſts, that they loſt all their Fierceneſs. The Lions and Tygers grew gentle, the Bears and wild Boars, like the moſt timorous Beaſts, ſeem'd caſt down, and amazed. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe. Arabſchab in the Hiſtory of Tamerlain.

Then the Grand Can ſeeing all theſe Animals together in a little Space of Ground, which the Moguls call Gerke, order'd them to prepare themſelves to march into it. He enter'd the firſt, with the Sound of Trumpets, holding in one Hand his naked Sword, and in the other his Bow. He had his Quiver full of Arrows hanging croſs his Shoulder, and was attended by ſome of his Sons, and all his General Officers. He himſelf began the Slaughter, ſtriking the fierceſt Beaſts, of which ſome became furious, and endeavour'd to defend their Lives. At laſt he retreated to an Eminence, ſeating himſelf upon a Throne which was prepared for him; and from thence he obſerved the Strength and Agility of the Princes his Children, and all his Officers who attack'd the Beaſts. Whatever danger they ran, yet no one avoided it, or gave back, but rather ſhow'd more Eagerneſs, well knowing that the Grand Can by this would judge of their Merit. All the young Soldiers, after the Princes and Lords, enter'd Marrakeſchy in Almaſalic or Almamalic.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

enter'd into the Gerke, and made a great ſlaughter of the Beaſts.

Then Genghizcan's Grandſons, follow'd by ſeveral young Lords of the ſame Age, preſented themſelves before the Throne, and by a Speech made after their manner, deſired the Emperor to give the Beaſts that remained their Lives and Liberty; which he granted them, praiſing the Valour of his Troops, who were immediately diſmiſſed, and ſent back to their Quarters. At the ſame time the Beaſts which had eſcaped the Scimeters and Arrows, ſeeing themſelves no longer ſurrounded, got away, and regain'd their Woods and Dens. Thus the Hunting at Termed ended, which laſted four Months, and had continued much longer, if it had not been fear'd that the Spring would ſurprize them whilſt employ'd in theſe Sports, when the War muſt be proſecuted. At length the Spring of the Year 1221. drew near, and the Carizmean Troops being already arrived, they had not a long time to reſt; for Genghizcan put himſelf at the Head of his Troops about the end of March, to paſs over the Oxus, and afterwards went towards Bactriana, where the Sultan Gelaleddin had got an Army together.

Marrakeſchy in Almaſalic or Almamalic.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

CHAP. VIII.

The Mogul Generals Expedition to Nisa, Caendar and Damegane.

BEFORE the Hunting began the Emperor had sent a Reinforcement of twenty thousand Men of his best Troops to Hubbe Nevian, and Suida Behadeur, the better to enable them to succeed in the Enterprizes he design'd they should undertake the next Year. These two Generals were on the Northern Confines of Corassana, when they received their Master's Orders. Whilst they waited for the Reinforcements he was to send them, which were now on their march thither, they divided the Troops they already had, and Hubbe went towards Mazendran, and Suida took the Road to Helvas. Mirconde, p. 370.

After they had ravaged both these Countries, they returned into Corassana, where Suida remain'd watching a Mahometan Lord, whose Name was Ainangecan, who was one of Sultan Mehemed's Officers, and molested the Moguls with some Troops he had got together, and often broke their Measures. Suida found means to oblige him to fight; but the Event prov'd unfortunate to the Moguls, for they were beaten and put to flight with their Leader. Whilst the Mahometan Lord was pursuing them, he met near Nacschivan a Brigade of Tartars who were going to retire into that Place. He fell Mehemed Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

fell upon them with his Cavalry, and drove them into the Ditch, where they were all drown'd. Ainangecan by this Exploit got ſome Reputation. He alarm'd the Country ſo, that they dared not refuſe him Tribute. Some of the Sultan's Troops who were disbanded, and lived in the Woods, went and join'd him. He march'd to Niſa, the Governour of which was gone to Mecca, and got of his Lieutenant the Tax-Money of the Year 1221, which he made uſe of to furniſh what was needful for his little Army. In the mean time, the Reinforcements, which the Mogul Generals expected, arrived, led by Jafer Nevian, and Irca Nevian, who each of them commanded ten thouſand Men. Ainangecan was no ſooner informed of it, but he retired to the Mountains.

The City of Niſa being a Hindrance to the Conqueſt of Coraſſana, of which it was a Part, Jafer and Irca Nevian had Orders to reduce that firſt. There was given them for a Lieutenant General, an old experienced Captain, named Balcouſch, who had the Command of the Van-Guard. When the Moguls had inveſted the Place, before they began the Aſſault they ſent to offer very reaſonable Terms to the Lieutenant who commanded in the Governour's Abſence: He did not abſolutely reject their Propoſals; but during the Treaty ſome of the Inhabitants imprudently ſhot at the Moguls, and Balcouſch being ſtruck by an Arrow in the Breaſt, fell down dead. This Accident, join'd with the Refuſal they made to ſurrender the City, excited the Moguls to revenge the Death of their General. Suida Behadeur preſs'd the two Nevians to begin the Siege, and had Materials brought to the Camp for building twenty great Engines to batter the Place.

The

The City of Nisa was situate, in the thirty ninth degree of Latitude, in Corassana, on the Confines of the Desart. It had in times past served as a Frontier Town to the Turks and Persians; and some say it was built by Darius Hystaspes King of Persia, whom the Turks called Guischtasbe. Sultan Mehemed usurped this City from the younger Children of a Prince named Nasreddin, who was Sovereign of it. He caused the Citadel to be pull'd down, and by his Order it was sow'd with Corn. But he afterwards permitted the Inhabitants to rebuild it; and it being a Place well fortify'd, they hoped it could hold out a long time. Schehabeddin, a Minister of State to the deceased Sultan, had brought into this Place all that he had most valuable, and was retired hither with his Son, and several Carizmeans who chose to follow him.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Abulfeda, p. 209. Schicardus in Taric Benyadem. Schicardus is the Author of the Translation of the Taric Benyadem, a Persian Manuscript.

When the Siege was form'd, and the Engines fixed in the proper Places on all sides, they began the Battering of the City. The Besieged defended themselves with all the Courage imaginable; and throwing from their Walls abundance of Wild-Fire, the Besiegers, that they might be able to approach nigh enough, caused their Slaves to carry on their Backs great Pieces of Wood, called Haracas, which were cover'd with wet Skins. They pursued their Assaults day and night; and at last, after fifteen days Siege, they made a Breach, which the Besieged were not able to repair. In the night they seized the Walls, from whence the Besieged could not repel them; and the next day, being Masters of the Place, they went into all the Houses, making the Inhabitants go out of them into a Plain, to suffer the Chastisement they had reserved for them. The unfortunate Vic-

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Victims were no ſooner aſſembled in the Plain, but the Mogul Army ſurrounded them, to hinder their retreating to the Mountains. Then they ſhot a great number of Darts and Arrows upon them, with which they were overwhelmed, and were even more miſerable than the Beaſts at the Chace of Termed, ſome of which eſcaped Death; but theſe poor People all periſhed, and were left either dead or mortally wounded in the Field, to ſerve for Food to the wild Beaſts and Fowls of Prey. 'Tis reported that there were this day ſeventy thouſand Perſons killed, of the Natives, Strangers, and Peaſants who had took ſhelter in this City. As for the Miniſter Schehabeddin and his Son, they were put to death after another manner; they were led in Chains to the Nevians, who cauſed the Coffers to be open'd in which were the Vizier's Treaſures; and after the Nevians had taken out all that was in them, they cauſed the Heads of the Father and Son to be ſtruck off. At this day there is to be ſeen Schehabeddin's Tomb in a Place called Hafna.

Three days after the Moguls had taken and plunder'd Niſa, they went to beſiege the Citadel of Caendar. This Place was accounted the ſtrongeſt in Coraſſana, and was in the Road from Niſa to Niſchabour. They were deſirous to gain this Place, not only as it was a hindrance to their conquering the reſt, but alſo becauſe they were informed that Nezameddin, one of the greateſt Lords of that Kingdom, was retired thither with all his Riches. In truth, Mehemed Niſavi, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Life of Sultan Gelaleddin, to whom this Place belonged, (tho he took upon him only the Title of Governour of this Place under the Sultan) has writ, that Nezameddin, ſome days days before the Arrival of the Enemies there, visited this Place, and esteeming it almost impregnable because of its Situation, said to him, We will wait the Tartars coming here. Notwithstanding which, this Lord, when he saw they attack'd it on the weakest side, was so frighted that he desired the Governour to let him down with Ropes into the Plain, at a Place where the Besiegers could not perceive him: which Mehemed Nisavi did, and Nezameddin by his good Fortune retired elsewhere. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

The Besiegers batter'd the Place a long time; but the Besieged made so brave a defence, that at last the Mogul General, being sensible of the Strength of the Citadel, despair'd of taking it with the Troops they had, and so resolved to raise the Siege, and were content only to send a Trumpeter to demand of the Governour Clothes, and other things of which the Soldiers stood in need. Mehemed Nisavi thought it was better to gratify them than to provoke them to continue the Siege, by refusing what they asked; he therefore caused all things to be looked for that the City could afford proper to send them. But the difficulty was to find Officers that would venture to accompany those who carried this Present; because it was believed that the Moguls and Tartars were cruel enough to revenge themselves on the Officers they should get in their power, for the shameful Retreat they saw themselves reduced to make. After a great many Persons had refused the Employment, two venerable old Men presented themselves; and having recommended their Children to their Fellow-Citizens, put themselves at the head of those who carried the Present. But they were no sooner carried before the Generals, and had presented what they Mehemed Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Abulfeda, p. 207.

they brought, but the Moguls were really so base as to imbrue their Hands in the Blood of these old Men. At last the Siege was raised, and the Country ravaged by the two Nevians. After which, Suida himself came to meet them, and they all three went to Hubbe Nevian, who was busied on another Expedition. They marched by the Desart and other Roads to Damegane, to attack it, which was a considerable Town situate in thirty six degrees and twenty minutes of Latitude.

Nasiraddin Tousy in his Astronomical Tables.

Jacut in Golius.

Ulugbegh in his Astronomical Tables.

They had not much trouble to take it, because all the rich Men and Nobility were retired with their best Effects into the Woods and Mountains which at some distance encompass'd the City. It was situate in a vast Plain, water'd by many Brooks of clear wholesome Water, which sprung out of the Rocks. These Streams were for their Excellency called the Water of Cosroes, because that King of Persia convey'd them by fine Aqueducts into this City, and would always drink of them, in whatsoever part of his Empire he resided. It was in the Orchards and Gardens of Damegane those Apples grew that were so much esteem'd for their Beauty and Taste, which they carried in former Ages into the Parthians Country to grace the Tables of the Rich and Great.

[3] From Damegane, which the Moguls found quite deserted, and nothing left to content their Avarice, they went before Amol, which they easily reduced, as also several other Towns in the Eastern Tabarestan, which was part of the antient Hircania. The City of Amol was [3] Some have called Comas or Comisene the Province of which Damegane was the Capital.

in in thirty six degrees and thirty five minutes of Latitude. It was in this Country that Thalestris Queen of the Amazons, came to visit Alexander the Great. She was attended by three hundred Women, and staid thirty days with the Macedonian Hero; and tho at first sight she found not his Person answerable to the Reputation he had gain'd, yet at last she told him that she thought him worthy to give Heirs to her Kingdom. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse. Quintus Curtius.

CHAP. IX.

The taking of the Fortress of Ylale. The Captivity of the Queen Turcan-Catun, the Mother of Sultan Mehemed. The Conquest of the Cities of Rei, Com, and other Places in the Persian Hircania.

HUBBE Nevian on his part made an Expedition no less famous and successful than that of the other Generals. He reduced not only the Western Part of Tabarestan, which is called Mazendrane; but he even seized upon the Sultaness, who was retir'd there with her immense Riches, which was one of the things Genghizcan most passionately wish'd for. It is true, the Emperor gave him the Informations and Instructions of which he stood in need for this Expedition; for this Prince, whose Vigilance was such that nothing could escape his Knowledge, having Spies or Correspondents in every Place, who gave him Fadlallah, P. 413.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

intelligence of all that paſt, had by the means of one of his Spies, learn'd that the Queen Mother was retired into the Fortreſs of Ylale: he preſently diſpatch'd a Courier to Hubbe, to acquaint him with it, giving him leave to run all hazards to take this Place, and to borrow, if there was occaſion, Forces of the other Generals.

Hubbe fail'd not to execute his Prince's Orders. He beſieged this ſtrong Place in Form; but he had for three Months batter'd it in vain, when the Grand Can being informed of the Condition the Place was in, and thence concluding that he might more eaſily reduce it by Famine, order'd Hubbe to cauſe a ſtrong Wall to be built without ſide his Lines, with Gates to be kept ſhut in the Night, and open in the Day, and to take care that Guard was ſtrictly kept in all Places, that the Place ſhould receive no Succours. Theſe the Emperor's laſt Orders were as punctually executed as the firſt, and the Citadel received no kind of Succours. Yet three Weeks more paſs'd, and the Governour had no thoughts of yielding; but boaſted, as they learn'd from the Deſerters who came over to them, that he ſtood not in need of any thing. But this was a falſe Report, for the Place had wanted Water a long time, and one part of the Gariſon and Inhabitants were already dead with Thirſt, and all other ſorts of Proviſions grew by degrees extremely ſcarce, and at laſt entirely fail'd; ſo that the Queen was forced to capitulate.

Fadlallah, p. 413.

This Want of Water paſt in the Country for a Miracle, becauſe this Place was always known to be better furniſh'd with it, than any other in Mazendrane, Rain commonly falling there every day; and yet there fell not one Drop during ring the whole Siege. They therefore said publickly that it was a Judgment of God to punish the Queen for having unjustly put to death so many Princes and Kings. And what confirmed the Mahometans in their opinion of this Drought being miraculous, was, that the Place was no sooner surrender'd, but there fell such abundance of Rain, that the Cisterns overflow'd, and the Water ran out of the Gates of the Citadel in a Flood. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Hubbe Nevian knowing the Extremities to which the Place was reduced, would not grant any thing to the Queen but her Life; and he declared that he expected to have all things else left to his Discretion, and they were forced to yield to his Terms. So soon as the Moguls were enter'd the Place, they seized of all the Queen's Treasure, and treated this Princess as a Captive. They sent her to Genghizcan under a strong and safe Guard, with her Women and Grandchildren, and all the Lords of the Empire who had retired with her into the Fortress of Ylale. One may say she was herself the Cause of her ill Fortune, or rather that the Hatred she bore her Grandson Gelaleddin ruin'd her: For when she heard that Sultan Mehemed had at his Death declared him his Heir, she was even distracted. And some days before this Place was besieged, having found a way to retire with Safety to this young Prince, she would not make her advantage of this Opportunity, whatever Remonstrances her Officers made to her. They in vain represented, that Gelaleddin was her Son's Child, and consequently a Part of herself, and that his Valour might still dispute the Fate of his Father's Kingdoms with Genghizcan. Instead of being persuaded by these Arguments, she did nothing but wish all sorts of The taking of Queen Turcan-Catun by Hubbe Nevian.

Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin, p. 52, 58.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Misfortunes to Gelaleddin, proteſting ſhe would never ſtoop to ſo baſe a thing, as ſhe call'd it, as to put herſelf under the Protection of the Son of Aigeac, her mortal Enemy; and that ſhe would even prefer any Slavery before all that Gelaleddin could do to ſerve her: that the loweſt Condition, and the moſt rigorous Treatment would be more agreeable to her than all the Marks of Friendſhip ſhe could receive from him.

Theſe were the Sentiments of the implacable Queen Turcan-Catun; but God puniſhed her, and to mortify her Pride, reduced her to ſuffer the moſt inſupportable Treatment: For the Grand Can ſometimes had her brought into his Preſence when he was at Table, and threw her Bits of the Meat which he had eat of, as if ſhe had been a Dog. What Mortification muſt this be to a Woman who but a little before could confer her Favours, and whoſe Sovereign Commands made the moſt part of the Kings and Princes of the Eaſt to tremble!

They put to death her Son's Grandſons before ſhe arrived at Genghizcan's Court, and left only the youngeſt alive to comfort her; nay, it was not long before they tore that from her alſo: for one day, as ſhe was combing his Head, a Perſon came and ſnatched him away from her Arms. She ſaid ſhe was more ſenſibly touched with this Loſs than with any ſhe had before felt, and her Grief for it was moſt bitter. He met with the ſame Fate as his Brothers. The young Princeſſes her Great Grand-daughters were not ſo unfortunate; not only their Lives were ſpared, but they were even married to Mogul Lords of the firſt Rank, and Prince Touſchi eſpouſed Can Sultane, who had before been married to Oſman Can, Prince of Samarcand. This was the Fate of this great Queen, who was led, as in Triumph, some Years after, thro the same Countries where she had govern'd. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

in

But to return to the Expeditions of Hubbe Nevian, after he left the strong Fortress of Ylale, he went directly to Rei, where Suida and the other Mogul Commanders came to join him in their return from Corassana, of which they had reduced both the North and West Parts, excepting Nischabour, which according to the Capitulation granted them by the two Generals, remain'd quiet till Gelaleddin took shelter there.

The taking of Rei, Com, and other Cities in Yrac Agemi or Persian Hircania.

The City Rei, which was situate in Yrac Agemi, or the Persian Hircania, five days Journey from Nischabour, in thirty five degrees and thirty five minutes of Latitude, seem'd able to make a vigorous defence; but the Moguls easily took it. The Inhabitants were divided into two Factions: one of which follow'd the Doctrines of Abouhanifa, one of the four Doctors who were the Heads of the four pretended Orthodox Sects amongst the Mahometans; and the others were attached to the Opinions of Doctor Schafay. So soon as the Cady of the City, who was of the last Sect, was inform'd that Hubbe was coming, he went out to meet him with the Chief of his Sect, and offer'd him the Place in the Name of all Schafay's Sectaries. Hubbe accepted this Offer with Joy, promising to spare all that were of that Belief. By this means he enter'd without Trouble into the City by two Gates, of which the Faction of Schafay were Masters. But the other Party had fortify'd themselves, and made some Resistance, more out of Hatred to the Schafaites, than to the Moguls themselves. But General Hubbe forced them to yield, and, induced by the ill Opinion the Cady had created in him of the

Marrakeschy, p. 18.

Abulfeda, p. 201.

Mirconde, p. 31.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Sect of Abouhanifa, put them almoſt all to death; ſo that not above one half of the Inhabitants of Rei were left alive.

Before this, Hubbe imagining he had not Troops ſufficient to take this Place, ſent to Suida, who ſoon came and join'd him. Theſe two Generals remain'd ſome time at Rei, invited by the Beauty of that City, which was one of the four moſt conſiderable in Yrac Agemi: the three others were Hamadan, Com, and Iſpahan. So ſoon as the Seaſon permitted to take the Field, they again parted; Hubbe marched to Hamadan, and Suida to Casbin. The firſt, before he marched to the City of Com, which was twenty Leagues off from Rei, encamped in a great Plain wherein it ſtood. This Plain was ſixteen Leagues long, and as many broad. He ſummon'd the Town to ſurrender; and they made ſo little Reſiſtance, that they might juſtly have deſerved the Mercy which was granted the Places that open'd their Gates to him: But the Deputies of the Schafaites, having an implacable Hatred for the Hanafites, whom they called Rafezis, that is to ſay, Hereticks, told Hubbe Nevian, whom they always accompanied, becauſe he much confided in them, that the People of Com were very mutinous, at which one need not wonder, ſince they follow'd the Doctrines of Abouhanifa; and, in fine, they ſo incenſed him againſt the Inhabitants of this City, that the Mogul General, under the pretext that one of his Orders had not been well obſerved, cauſed the greateſt part of them to be kill'd or carried away Slaves. After which, Com was plunder'd.

Mirconde, p. 31.

This City was ſituate in thirty four Degrees and forty five Minutes of Latitude, about the middle of the way between Casbin and Iſpahan.

Abulfeda, p. 199.

Altho

Altho this Place had been very much defaced, it has been since perfectly repair'd, some Kings having kept their Court there; and there are still to be seen the Tombs of two Kings of Persia, Schah-Sefi and Schah Abbas II. which Tombs are very magnificent. Hubbe departed from Com, some few days after, and marched to Hamadan, having made Preparations for besieging it. So soon as he arrived in its Neighbourhood, and had made all things ready to storm this Place, all of a sudden he made a Peace with Magededdin who commanded it: At which the Army were the more surprized, because these People had appear'd more insolent than others who had not been pardon'd; nay, they had even committed some Outrages on the Moguls. The General's Enemies reported that he had suffer'd himself to be corrupted; but his Friends maintain'd that he had only follow'd the Grand Can's Orders.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Thevenot's Voyages, l. 3. p. 336.

Sir John Chardin's Voyages, p. 459.

Hamadan was situate in thirty five degrees and ten minutes of Latitude, fifty Leagues distant from Com. 'Twas a great and populous City, and had often been the Abode of Kings. At the time when the Moguls approached it, it had very strong Walls, and a good Castle, which is now in Ruins. Its Beauty at present consists in its Gardens and Fountains, which take their Rise from the Mountain Alvende, not far from this Place, and where there are to the number of a thousand Springs. The Persians say this City was built by Jemschide, one of the first Kings of the antient Persians.

Abulfeda, p. 159.

Mirconde, p. 31.

Hubbe Nevian led his Troops thence to Dinever, Carmisin, Souvan, Halvan, Nehavende, and several other Towns in Yrac Agemi, of which he render'd himself Master, and got great Riches. As for Suida Behadeur, who was gone to beſiege the City of Casbin, ſituate on the Confines of Deilem, he carry'd it by Storm, and put to the Sword fifty thouſand Perſons, in this City, in Deilem, and other the adjacent Countries. The Inhabitants of Iſpahan by a quick Submiſſion prevented the laſt Extremities of War. Casbin was ſituate in the thirty ſeventh Degree of Latitude, between Rei and Abhar. All theſe Expeditions were made in the Year of our Lord 1221, and of the Hegira 618. at the time when Philip Auguſtus was King of France, and Henry III. King of England. Genghizcan was then ſixty ſeven Years old.

Mirconde, p. 32.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

The End of the Third Book.

THE

THE HISTORY OF GENGHIZCAN the Great, THE First EMPEROR of the Antient Moguls and Tartars.

The FOURTH BOOK.

The ARGUMENT.

THE Conqueſts Genghizcan continued to make in his own Perſon, or by his Lieutenants in Hircania, Azerbijana or the Country of the Medes, and in one Part of Fars; that is to ſay, in the Kingdoms of the Parthians, Medes, and Perſians: in the Provinces of India beyond the River Indus, in that of the Alans, and other Countries bordering on Muſcovy. The Miſery of the great Queen Turcan-Catun; and what paſt between the Sultan Gelaleddin her Grandſon, and the Mogul Princes. The Puniſhment of Cande-Tangut, a Rebel who was Tributary to Genghizcan. And, laſtly, the Death of Genghizcan, which happen'd ſoon after he had diſpoſed of his Empire, and at the time when he was going to carry the War into the Southern China, called Mangi or Matchin, of which Nanquin is the Capital City.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I.

Genghizcan's Expedition to the Country of Balc, antiently called Bactriana. The Siege of Talcan.

WHILST Genghizcan made War in Transoxiana, and his Lieutenants subdued the Countries of the antient Parthians, Gelaleddin, Son of the King of Carizme, was in the Eastern Parts of Coraſſana, called Balc, or Bactriana, where he got together some Troops. He dwelt many Weeks in the City of Balc, which was the Capital, as it had been in times past when it was called Bactra. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

The favourable Reception the Inhabitants of this City gave Prince Gelaleddin, displeased Genghizcan, and conceiv'd in him a mortal Hatred againſt againſt them. And this Emperor's Army being extremely formidable, how valiant ſoever the Prince of Carizme was, yet he did not care to tempt his Fate by venturing a Battel, but remain'd in this Country only to fatigue the Moguls with the Troops he had with him: To accompliſh which, he made uſe of all the Advantages the narrow Lanes and Paſſages, the Woods and Rivers could afford an able General, who found himſelf much inferior in Strength to his Enemy.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

At laſt the Grand Can having ſecured all the Countries ſituate beyond the Oxus, cauſed his Army to paſs over this River, and led them with all the ſpeed imaginable to the City of Balc. The great Succeſs of this fortunate Conqueror, the numerous Troops that follow'd him, and Fame, which magnifies every thing, all put together, ſoon determined the Inhabitants to open their Gates to him, without ſtaying to feel his Fury. The great Lords of the Country who had retired thither, went out with the City Officers to meet him, and make their Submiſſions to him, carrying with them an infinite number of rich Preſents. But he rejected their Offers, and ſaid, That People who had ſo kindly received and entertain'd his Enemy, could not have a ſincere Friendſhip for him, and that their Proteſtations were faithleſs. He recounted to them the Particulars wherein they had aſſiſted Gelaleddin: He mentioned the Troops they had raiſed for him even in their City, the Sums of Money they had furniſhed him withal to pay his Army: In fine, being fully informed by his Spies, how far they had aſſiſted Gelaleddin, he forgot not to remember to them every Particular. Then he reproached them in this manner: Ought you not, ſaid

Abulfarag. p. 292, 447.

Mirconde, p. 39.

ſaid he, to bluſh for ſhame, for having ſo little Love for your natural Prince, and ſo little Averſion to the Tyrants who have put him in Irons? Is it thus you ought to treat thoſe, who after having ſtripp'd Amededdin your Sovereign of his Kingdoms, have cruelly put him and his Son to death? Mean time, the Mogul Army marched to the City, and the Inhabitants, knowing it was agreed to open the Gates, did not ſhut them againſt the Vanguard, which their Leaders would have go into the City. So that the Emperor ſeeing himſelf Maſter of the Place, cauſed an Order to be publiſhed, commanding all the Men immediately to go forth of the City into the Plain. They obey'd, tho they were not ignorant what the Moguls were uſed to do after their taking a City. When they were all aſſembled, the Grand Can cauſed the young People who were fit for Slaves to be ſet in a Place apart, and order'd the greateſt part of the old Men to be beheaded. Then the City was plunder'd, and the Booty diſtributed according to the Mogul Law. The Walls were beaten down, and the Caſtle demoliſh'd. The Mogul Army was greatly enriched by this City's Ruin; for there were all ſorts of Merchandize and Treaſure in Balc, becauſe it had always been a Place of great Trade. Moreover, it was full of Monuments of exquiſite Workmanſhip, and all things that could ſerve to adorn ſo great a City, it having been the Abode of many illuſtrious Perſons famous in all Arts, who had much contributed to its Beauty. The publick Buildings were ſpacious and regular. The Caravanſeras, or Inns to lodge the Caravans in, appear'd magnificent, as did alſo the Colleges and Moſques; and, according to Mirconde's Report, there were

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Niſavi in the Life of Gelaleddin.

Bin Ketirzahaby in Inticabſalatin.

Abulcair, p. 22.

Fadlallah, p. 410.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

were no less than twelve hundred Baths or Hot-houses, in this City.

It was situate in thirty six degrees and forty one minutes of Latitude, in a most fertile Plain, four Leagues distant from the Mountains, and eight from the Oxus. The Country round it was planted with Sugar-Canes and Lemon-Trees. Schicardus assures us it was first built by Cayumaras, one of the Pischdadien Kings [4], who was the first that reign'd in Persia and Media. It was afterwards ruined by Semiramis, as Diodorus of Sicily reports, and repair'd by Loraspe the Father of Hydaspes, as Herodotus assures us, at the same that Nebuchodonosor ruin'd the City of Jerusalem. Its Suburbs were water'd by a River called Dehac, which having run thro all the Country, discharges itself into the River Oxus, about twelve Leagues from the City. It is to this day one of the capital Cities of the Uzbecks, and has its particular Sovereign, who wants not Forces, as well as the other Princes of his Nation, to oppose the Persians when they make war with them.

Abulfeda, p. 217.

Jacut in Golius.

Mirconde, p. 39.

After the Mogul Emperor had thus reduced the City of Balc to his Obedience, he sent Detachments out of his Army to India and Persia, and left a considerable part of his Troops in Transoxiana to keep it in awe, whilst he went to Tocarestan, to besiege the City of Talcan, which was but seven days Journey from Balc, and was esteemed the strongest City in all Asia for its Situation, it being built upon a very steep Mountain called Nocrecouh. But he had but just began the Siege, when he had Information

Abulfarag. p. 293, 448.

Fadlallah, p. 410.

[4] That is to say, the first of the Kings of Persia.

mation that the Sultan Gelaleddin, not finding himself in a condition to venture a Battel, was retired towards the ſtrongeſt Places of Coraſſana with what Forces he had been able to get together, and that it was believed he was already got to Niſchabour. On this News he detached ſixty thouſand Men to purſue him, and prevent his making any farther progreſs; he join'd theſe with another Detachment of twenty thouſand Men, whom he had a little before ſent into Mazendrane to recruit the Army of the Generals Hubbe and Suida, which when they firſt went on their Expeditions conſiſted of thirty thouſand Moguls, and was now diminiſhed by the Loſs of ten thouſand. He gave the Command of this great Detachment to Prince Tuli, and order'd him to go and find out the Sultan Gelaleddin, and to beſiege the City of Niſchabour, if he was ſtill there; but if he was gone thence, to lay ſiege to Merou before he undertook any thing againſt Niſchabour or Herat, to the end he might weaken Coraſſana as much as he poſſibly could, and ſo facilitate the conquering the reſt of this Country, in which the other Generals had already taken ſome Towns. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Whilſt Tuli went to execute his Father's Commands, Genghizcan planted the Engines before Talcun, which he vigorouſly attack'd, but the Beſieged defended themſelves with great Reſolution. They anſwer'd his Engines with theirs, and threw Fire for Fire. All who were in the Place ſtrove to outvy each other in Bravery; and having a great ſtore of Ammunition, and Proviſions of all ſorts, they flatter'd themſelves they ſhould be able to hold out a long time. Beſides which, the Beſiegers had neither Ground nor Trenches to ſhelter them when Abulfarag. p. 293. Fadlallah, p. 413. Mirconde, p. 39.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

when they made their Attacks; they had only ſome Blinds to defend them from the Darts and Wildfire. The Beſieged killed ſo great a number of them, that the Emperor's Army was conſiderably diminiſhed. This Prince repented his having meddled with this Place, yet could not bear to be diſappointed; and fearing he had not Troops enough to reduce it, he ſent two Couriers, one after another, to Tuli, with Orders to return to him forthwith, without mentioning his Reaſons for ſo doing: He only told him he recall'd him becauſe of the exceſſive Heats which now began to be ſenſibly felt. In the mean time, the Grand Can made his Army reſt for ſome Weeks, and took care they were well fed, which perfectly recover'd and put them in good heart.

Fadlallah, p. 413.

He then called all the Engineers together, to conſult with them of the means by which they might be able to reduce Talcan; but the Methods they propoſed ſeeming to him very uncertain, he reſolved to ſcale the Mountain on all ſides, let the Danger be what it would, that ſo he might oblige the Beſieged, being every where aſſaulted, to divide their Forces. In order to this, he cauſed to be made with all ſpeed, a great number of Grappling-Irons, long Nails, Hooks, Ladders, and Ropes, to aſcend the Rock, and made many vain Attempts to ſcale it ſeveral times; for the Beſieged, who kept on their Guard, received the Moguls with their uſual Bravery, and kill'd a very great number of them. Yet Genghizcan had them ſupported with ſo many ſorts of Engines when they mounted the Ladders, that at laſt a great many Soldiers were got together on the top of the Mountain with their Arms, which they had faſten'd round them; which ſo aſtoniſh'd astonished the Besieged, that running hastily to repulse them, they imprudently left some Posts unguarded, of which the Moguls immediately seized, and enter'd the Town. The Besieged soon having notice of this Misfortune, returned in Confusion to oppose their Enemies, and drive them out; but the Moguls were too strong for them, and put them all to the Sword: and being animated by the Remembrance of the Fatigues they had suffer'd for seven Months past, which time the Siege had lasted, they exercised all the Cruelties imaginable. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Talcan was situate between Merou and Balc, in thirty seven degrees and twenty five minutes of Latitude, and dependant on Tocarestan. The first City of this Name, which had been heretofore very flourishing, was not standing in the time of Genghizcan, and there was nothing left to be seen of it but the Citadel, which a Prince of Tocarestan had caused to be built on the top of the Mountain Nocrecouh, so called because of the Mines of Silver which it enclosed. This Citadel being very large, they gave it the Title of a City or Fortress, with the Name of Talcan. Thus the Emperor took this Place without Prince Tuli's Assistance, who did not arrive before its Reduction. The Princes Octai and Zagatai also return'd from Carizme at the same time; but Touschi was gone to his Governments. We shall now make mention of what Tuli did during the seven Months that he was gone from the Emperor. Condemir in Habibassuyar, p. 7. Abulfeda, p. 217. Jacut in Golius. Abulfarag. p. 293. Mirconde, p. 238.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

CHAP. II.

Prince Tuli's Expedition againſt the Sultan Gelaleddin, Son of Sultan Mehemed. The Sieges of the Cities of Merou and Niſchabour.

Mirconde, p. 41.

PRINCE Tuli was no ſooner enter'd Coraſſana, but he ſent Orders to twenty thouſand Men, of whom we have ſpoke before, to hold themſelves always in a readineſs to join him in caſe of need. He ſent word alſo to Hubbe and Suida to come to him; and after having conſulted with them about the Enterprizes he deſign'd to undertake, he ſent them back into Perſia, where their Troops were encamp'd.

Fadlallah, p. 413.

Condemir, p. 8.

'Tis true, Gelaleddin had taken the Road to Niſchabour with all the Troops he had, deſigning there to get ſuch an Army together as ſhould be able to reſiſt the Moguls. For this purpoſe he ſtaid a whole Month in this City, having writ to the Governours of the Frontier-Towns, and other Places which were ſtill obedient to him, to ſend him all the Soldiers they could furniſh; and order'd the Lords who in the Confuſion his Empire now was in, had made themſelves Maſters of the Provinces they lived in, to come and join him with ſpeed, with all the Troops they could poſſibly raiſe. He aſſured them in his Letters, that he would never think of what was paſt, but would conconfirm them in the Poſſeſſion of the Governments they had gotten: and he thence diſpatched Meſſenger upon Meſſenger to get his Orders perform'd. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Prince Tuli did not give him time to get a great Army together, but marched towards him with extraordinary Diligence. So ſoon as Gelaleddin was inform'd of his being enter'd into Coraſſana, and that he was marching towards Niſchabour, he went out of this City, and it was as much as he could do, to conduct the Troops he had with him in ſafety to the Fortreſs of Cahera, where he received the News of Talcan's being beſieged. Tho Gelaleddin was brave and wiſe, yet he was at this time almoſt diſtracted. He curſed his Fate, which ſeem'd now bent againſt him, and yielded himſelf up to Deſpair. He had an Inclination to ſhut himſelf up in Cahera, and wait the Moguls coming; but the Governour perſuaded him from this Deſign, repreſenting to him, That a Prince of his Reputation and Merit ought not to ſhut himſelf up in Forts and Citadels, tho they were built on the Heads of the Twin-Stars, or Horns of Taurus or the Pleiades. Theſe are the Words of the Hiſtorian Niſavi. Niſavi in his Life of Gelaled-din, p. 88.

This bold Remonſtrance awaked the Prince's Courage, who ſtrait cauſed to be brought to him all the Money he had ſaved, to diſtribute to his Soldiers. After which, he went to the City of Boſt, in the Province of Segeſtan, where he found one of the Officers of his Army who had eſcaped the Maſſacre of Balc, and he inform'd him of the Forces Genghizcan had with him before Talcan and in other Places, and told him it was believed he had near eight hundred thouſand Men in pay, including the Gariſons he had in the Cities. This News made Gela- leddin tremble, who comparing his own Weakneſs with the Enemy's Strength that purſued him, wiſhed, ſays Marrakeſchi, that thick Darkneſs would cover the whole World, and take place of the Light.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Seige of Merou.

Tulican after a long March into Coraſſana, learn'd that Gelaleddin was gone from Niſchabour, and therefore, according to the Emperor his Father's Orders, he took a Reſolution to go and beſiege Merou. So ſoon as it was known in this City that his Army approached, Factions and Diſſentions began to ariſe. A general Council was held, where ſome, to ſupport their Advice which was to yield, reaſon'd thus, that all the Countries and Places which had reſiſted, were intirely ruined; others, who were willing to defend the City, repreſented to the Aſſembly, to ſupport their Opinion, the Cruelties executed on the Inhabitants of Balc, who had ſubmitted. After many Diſputes, the Mufty's Party, who were reſolved to ſurrender the Place, carried it againſt the Cady's, who oppoſed it, and proteſted againſt all that ſhould be done contrary to the Intereſt of the City.

Condemir, p. 8.

Mirconde, p. 41.

The Mufty's Party immediately ſent Deputies to meet the Mogul General, who received them kindly, and granted them the Conditions they deſired, which was, not to enter the City with more than ſeven thouſand Men, on condition that the People ſhould obey, and pay the Grand Can the yearly Tribute then to be agreed on. But it ſo happen'd during theſe Tranſactions, that a certain Turk named Bouga, who had been Captain of the Sultan Mehemed's Guides, knowing it was reſolved by ſome to ſurrender the City, enter'd into it, and fully reſolved to defend it. The Turcomans, whoſe number were conſiderable, ſupported him; him; and the Cady's Party, who wish'd no better, join'd with them. Bouga had for some days the absolute Command of all, and finding how sweet it was to govern a great People, resolved to spare nothing that could secure him in the Post which Fortune had raised him to. Therefore when Megir, a great Lord who had belong'd to the old Sultan's Court, a Man who had the greatest part of his Estate in that Country, and a Palace in the City, would have come into it, Bouga used all his Endeavours to keep him out; but that Lord enter'd in spite of him, and all the Cady's Party chose rather to obey him than Bouga, who was soon forced to quit a Station which he had found so agreeable in the few days he enjoy'd it. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Id. p. 42.

Megir was the Son of a Lady whom Sultan Mehemed had loved, and afterwards given in Marriage to one of his Courtiers. He put himself at the Head of those who seem'd resolved to defend the Place; and notwithstanding the Mufty's Party opposed it, the Gates of the City were shut, and Preparations made to maintain a Siege. Mean time, Prince Tuli came up, and encamp'd before the Walls of the City, and disposed all things to assault it. He learned by some Prisoners that were taken and brought before him, the State of the Place, and promised himself to be soon Master of it, yet he found more Resistance than he expected. Megir tired the Besiegers with frequent Sallies, amongst which he made one so successful, that he cut above a thousand of the Grand Can's best Houshold-Troops in pieces. Tuli much regretted these brave Men, and to be revenged, gave a general Assault, which the Besieged sustain'd with a most amazing Resolution, and the Moguls were repulsed with Loss for twenty two Mirconde, p. 44.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

days together: in which time the Beſieged were greatly weaken'd, and Megir finding that he ſhould ſoon be overcome, choſe to ſubmit. Gemaleddin, one of the chief Men of the City, was of his opinion; and both having perſuaded their Faction to it, ſent great Preſents to Tuli, offering him the City. The Mogul Prince treated them better than they expected; for he gave them Protection for their Goods and four hundred of their Friends, on condition that they gave him a faithful account of all the rich People in the City, which they did, giving him a Liſt of them. After which, the Moguls enter'd the Place, and according to their uſual Cuſtom, made all the Inhabitants go forth of it, one part of whom they made Slaves of, and they cut the Throats of the reſt. Tulican gave the Government of Merou to Ziaeddin, a Lord of that Country, who had done him conſiderable Services. But when the Mogul Prince was gone away from this City, Ziaeddin was kill'd by Barmaze his Lieutenant, and the Country fell again into Confuſion.

Abulfeda, p. 215.

The City of Merou, call'd alſo Schahigehan, was ſituate in thirty ſeven degrees and forty minutes of Latitude, to the Northward of another City called Merou Erroud, and from which it was but five Leagues diſtant. Schahigehan ſignifies King of the World; and this Name was given to the City becauſe Sultan Malicſcha, one of the greateſt of the Seljukides, extremely loved it, by reaſon of its fine Situation, the Serenity of the Air, and the Fertility of the Ground. He had cauſed it to be built with deſign to make it the Place of his Reſidence, and accordingly paſt the greateſt part of his Life in it, and died there, for whom they erected a moſt magnificent Tomb.

This

This City produced several learned Men, and Jacut assures us that he had seen there three publick Libraries, in one of which there were twelve thousand Volumes in Manuscript. Some will have it that this City was first built by Tahmuras, the fourth of the first Kings of Persia, called Pischdadians; and others say it was built by Jamanii, the Daughter of Artaxerxes Longimanus King of Persia. It was situate in a sandy Plain, which produced Salt. Three Rivers render'd it a delicious Place; and it was equally distant, that is, twelve days Journey, from Nischabour, Herat, Balc, and Bocara. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse. Jacut in Golius.

Since the Death of Sultan Mehemed, the Moguls under the Conduct of the Generals Hubbe Nevian and Suida Behadeur, had render'd themselves Masters of all the Western Parts of Corassana by taking a great number of Cities: But they had still left Nischabour in Peace, because at the beginning of their Expedition, as has been before related, they had made a Treaty with the Inhabitants of this City, who had sworn Fidelity to them. Nevertheless, when they saw Gelaleddin, the Son of the Sultan their Master, appear in their Country, they were so touched with seeing this Prince wander from one Province to another, that they could not refrain from giving him some Assistance, and secretly furnished him with all the Refreshments of which his Troops stood in need; nay, they even gave him Money to raise Forces. But they took all the Precaution imaginable to hide what they did for him. And in effect, Tulican came not to the knowledge of it; but by misfortune the Grand Can was inform'd of it by his Spies, and was so enraged, that he resolved that Hour to besiege Nischabour. He writ to Prince Tuli, who was then in the Eastern Parts of Schicardus in Taric Beniadem. Scherif Idrisi, or the Nubian Geographer.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

of Coraſſana, to lay aſide all his other Deſigns, and go and beſiege Niſchabour, and make them feel the ſevereſt Chaſtiſements that could be inflicted on rebellious Cities. On the receit of theſe Orders, Prince Tulican quitted the Country of Merou, of which he had juſt before taken the Capital, and went to Niſchabour, the Inhabitants of which not hoping for any Pardon or Mercy, reſolved to defend themſelves to the laſt Extremity.

Siege of the City of Niſchabour in Coraſſana.

The Command of the Vanguard of the Moguls was given to Prince Tafar, who had brought the Troops from Mazendran; but this Captain, at his Arrival at Niſchabour, had the ill Fortune to be wounded with an Arrow in the Navel in a Sally which the Inhabitants made upon the Moguls, and died of his Wound. This Accident obliged Tuli to take more care and precaution than he had before done to render his Enterprize ſucceſsful. He defer'd the Siege for ſome days, becauſe the Engines were not ready, and made his Army encamp to the Eaſtward of the City, near a Town call'd Touſchanian. The Country round it was full of pleaſant Springs and Trees, and here the Workmen could conveniently make Blinds, Battering-Rams, and other Inſtruments for War. So ſoon as all was ready, they batter'd the City with above twelve hundred Engines. The Beſieged defended it like Lions; but after three days Siege the Moguls having perceived a ſecret Paſſage which the Ruins of a Wall falling down diſcover'd, enter'd by that Way, and ſurprized the Place, making a terrible Slaughter of the Inhabitants. They ſpent a Day and a Night in plundering this miſerable City, and reduced to Slavery an infinite number of young People; nay, the greateſt part of all thoſe who eſcaped the Marrakeſchy, p. 15.

Condemir, p. 8.

Fadlallah, p. 413.

the Edge of the Sword, died underground in Caves and Vaults which they had made to save themſelves in: In fine, all the City was deſtroy'd, and there was nothing left ſtanding neither Moſque, Fortreſs, Houſes, Towers, nor Walls, all was razed to the very Foundations; and they levelled the Ground in ſuch a manner, that if the Hiſtory of Coraſſana may be credited, Horſes might run over it without ſtumbling. It is alſo related that they ſpent twelve days in counting the Dead who belong'd to the City, and that comprehending thoſe who were ſlain in ſome other Places which belong'd to Niſchabour, where Tuli ſent ſome of his Troops, 'tis computed that the Moguls kill'd to the number of ſeventeen hundred and forty ſeven thouſand Perſons; which ſeems altogether incredible, at leaſt if they do not comprehend in this number all thoſe who periſhed in the Ruins, and in ſome other Towns which were dependant on Niſchabour, and taken at the ſame time. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe. Niſavi's Life of Gelaled-din, p. 75. Marrakeſchy, p. 15.

After the Deſtruction of this City, Tulican received an Order from the Emperor his Father to repair to him. Niſchabour had often been the Capital City of Coraſſana. One Hiſtorian pretends that it took its Original from Sapor King of Perſia, who had cauſed it to be built, and ſirnamed it the Cloſet of the Eaſt, becauſe in his time it was full of all ſorts of Curioſities, which its great Trade drew into it. And tho the Moguls had put it into the Condition we have juſt before related, yet in ſome time after it was reſtored to its former Greatneſs, being rebuilt, and all things done that could contribute to adorn a City; and the fineſt Water in the World, which ſprung from the neighbouring Mountains was brought into it by Canals. It is out out of these Mountains that they get the Oriental Turquoise Stones, which are called in the Levant, Pirouze Nischabouri, to distinguish them from others. This City was but twelve Leagues from Tous, or thereabouts, where the celebrated Nassir Eddin Tousi, a great Astrologer, and Author of certain Ephemerides, was born, as likewise many other learned Men. This Nassir puts the Situation of these two City in thirty seven degrees of Latitude. Tous was only a little more to the South East of Nischabour. The City of Tous was at the same time ruined by the Moguls, but it was rebuilt a few Years afterwards, and has been since this Misfortune one of the most beautiful and most celebrated Cities in the Persian Empire. Ismael Sefevi, the first King of the Family of Sefevi's, that is to say, of the Descendants of Schec-Sefi, who at that time reign'd in Persia, caused it to be enclosed with strong Walls, and three hundred Towers. This King then made it the Capital of Corassana, by the Name of Meschehed; and as several other Princes before him had chose to have their Tombs there, so he chose to have his: and many of his Successors, after his Example, have been buried there.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Nassir Eddin Tousi's Geography.

Tous was the City which is at present called Meschehed Corassana.

When Prince Tuli had finished the Sieges of Nischabour and Tous, he led his Army before Herat, whither he had been told that Gelaleddin was retired; but it was a false Information, for this Prince had taken the Road to Bost, a City in the Province of Segastan, and had no thoughts of retiring to Herat, which was governed by a Mahometan Lord, who tho he was his Subject, yet was his Enemy: This Lord's Name was Schamseddin. He had surprized this City in the Absence of Emin Melic the Sultan's Uncle, who possess'd this Country by Agreement.

Condemir, p. 8.

ment. And this Schamſeddin was not the only Perſon who had been guilty of theſe ſort of Uſurpations; for the greateſt part of the Governours had done the ſame thing in the other Provinces during the Confuſion the Empire was in. And thus Sultan Gelaleddin was deſpoiled of almoſt all his Provinces. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

The Mogul General arrived at Herat in twelve days, and immediately laid Siege to the City. Schamſeddin defended it courageouſly, and there paſt not a day in which he did not come to Blows with the Moguls. And tho this Lord was not generally beloved becauſe of his Uſurpation; yet the Advantages he daily gained over the Beſiegers, eſtabliſhed his Authority, and gave them hopes of good Succeſs: But the eighth Day of the Siege he was kill'd in fighting, and the Inhabitants of Herat believing that no other amongſt them was ſo well able to ſuſtain the Charge againſt the Moguls, reſolved to yield, and Deputies were ſent to Tuli, to make Propoſals. The Reſiſtance he had already met with before this City, and the Bravery of the General, whoſe Death he knew nothing of, made him condeſcend to Terms with them, after he was well aſſured that Gelaleddin was not in the Place. He required nothing of the Inhabitants but to ſubmit themſelves, and ſwore that no Man in the City ſhould receive damage either in his Goods or Perſon, and told them they ſhould every Year pay to the Grand Can but one half of the Tribute they uſed to pay to Sultan Mehemed. When the Moguls enter'd the City, they exactly obſerved this Capitulation with reſpect to the People of Herat; but the Gariſon, and all the Officers belonging to the Sultan, who were to the number of twelve thouſand, were put Siege of Herat, the Capital of Coraſſana.

Condemir, p. 8.

Marrakeſchy, p. 16.

to

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

to death. Tulican made Aboubequir Governour of this City, and caused an Oath of Fidelity to be administer'd to the Inhabitants, and with sixty thousand Men went for Talcan, whither his Father had recalled him.

Herat has always past for a very strong City, and at present serves for a Rampart to the Persians, and preserves their Frontiers against the Uzbecks. It is situate on the River Heriroude, in the thirty fourth degree and thirty minutes of Latitude, within two Leagues of a Mountain which had on its Top a celebrated Place, where the Persians with their Magi's went to worship the Fire, and perform the other Rights and Ceremonies of their Religion; which some Worshippers of Fire, whom the Persians call Guebres, or Anteschpereſt, to this day perform in a Place built out of its Ruins.

Marrakeschy, p. 16.

That particular Country in which the City of Herat stood, was the Aria of the Antients. Alexander the Great was its Founder, according to Mirconde's Opinion; and it was no small Honour to Herat, that it was the native Country of this illustrious Author, who has given the Description of it in the Oriental History, which he composed in the Persian Language, entitled Raouzeteſſafa, that is to say, the Garden of Pleasure. The City and Country is very populous. The Inhabitants are for the most part honest and courteous People, and the Air is excellent.

Herat the Birth-place of Mirconde.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

CHAP. III.

The Sieges of the Cities of Bamian, Candahar, Frontier-Towns of India on the side of Persia.

AFTER the taking of Talcan, the Emperor held several Councils with his Son, and caused his Army to march towards Bamian, still waiting for News of Sultan Gelaleddin, and the Troops whom he had sent towards India, to search for him, if he came that way, or take such Places as might be useful to his farther Designs. Abulfarag. Tulican p. 293. Mirconde, p. 40.

The Sultan Gelaleddin staid long enough in the City of Bost to raise Troops; but when he learn'd the Strength of the Mogul Army, he found himself in a great Dilemma, and knew not what course to take, whether to resist or fly, both appearing equally dangerous. At last the extreme Danger he was in awaken'd his Courage, and he resolved to oppose his Enemies, even to Death. Thus determined, he departed from Bost, endeavouring to get into Gazna before the Moguls could arrive there to take it; so he led his Army, which consisted of about twenty thousand Men, towards Zebulestan, without staying in any Place by the way, and arrived safely at Gazna, which was twenty four days Journey from Bost. Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin.

Gazna, which Ptolomy places in Quirman, was situate in thirty three degrees and five minutes of Abulfeda, p. 219.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

of Latitude, and had always been a City of great Trade for all sorts of Merchandize brought from Zagatai, Persia and India. It had been the Capital of the Sultan Mahmoud Gaznavi's Empire, the most potent Prince of all the East in the time that the Seljukides began to make any Figure. A Lord called Kerber Melic commanded in this City, during the Absence of the Sultan Gelaleddin; but the Misfortunes of the Sultan his Father had much alienated the Minds of the People, so that there remain'd but little Obedience in the People of Gazna, as well as in most other Places. For which reason, some time before this Prince's Arrival in that Place, there had been many Disturbances caused by the Divisions amongst the great Lords. Yet the Sultan Gelaleddin was received in Gazna with all the Affection that a People who passionately loved their King, could testify at his Return after a long Absence. The Author who relates this, says, That the Inhabitants were as much overjoy'd at his Arrival, as the Mussulmen at the end of the Ramadan, when the new Moon, which puts an end to the Fast, appears. This Prince would not mix Sorrow with their Joy, by punishing those who had been guilty of Crimes against him, which he might justly have done; but he dissembled his Resentments, and defer'd till another time the Punishment of their Crimes.

Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin, p. 110.

The Grand Can having information that Gelaleddin was at Gazna, hasten'd his March, that he might surprize him; but he was stopp'd in Zabulestan by the Garison of Bamian, which he hoped to take without Opposition, but it cost him more time and trouble than he imagined.

Mirconde, p. 40.

The

The Governour absolutely refused to surrender, whatever Summons were sent him, and protested that notwithstanding all the Moguls Menaces, he would defend the Place to the last Drop of its Blood, since it was intrusted to him. This Answer obliging Genghizcan to besiege it in form, he had many Difficulties to surmount, because the Inhabitants, having long expected to be attack'd, had ruined all the Country round about the City, to deprive the Enemy of all means of Subsistance. The very People of the Province had carried away all the Stones, and other things that might be of use to the Besiegers; so that for four or five Leagues round Bamian there was nothing to be found that could be of any service to the Moguls They had just begun to batter the Place, when a Courier arrived in the Camp from the General who commanded the Forces Genghizcan had sent towards India, to inform him of the total Defeat of his Army by Gelaleddin, which happen'd in the following manner.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Abulfarag. p. 293.

Mirconde, p. 42.

Marrakeschy, p. 16.

Two or three days after Gelaleddin was got into the City of Gazna, he learnt that there were Moguls in that Neighbourhood who besieged the City of Candahar, and had Orders to watch his Motions. This News was the more afflicting to him, because he could not relieve the Place; but he knew at the same time that Emin Melic, the Son of his Uncle by the Mother's side, was not far off from him. This Lord was come out of Herat, not only to watch the Moguls, whom he saw every where victorious, but also to seize of some Places situate in the Mountains in the Country of Segestan, which were very necessary to be secured, for the Preservation of Herat. In his Absence, Schamseddin, Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin, p. 116.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

din, as we have said before, commanded in this City.

Emin Melic had with him ten thousand Turkish Horse, well mounted, and well equipp'd, all resolute Men. Gelaleddin sent to compliment him, and let him know that he desired him to come to him since they were so near one another, and that if he would come, it must be quickly, for there was no time to lose. Emin Melic made no scruple to go and offer him his Service. The Sultan shew'd him all the Demonstrations of Friendship and Confidence in him, and to try his Sincerity, told him, that a Body of Moguls were now before Candahar, and that he design'd to go and raise the Siege. Emin Melic consented to join his Troops with the Sultan's. And thus agreed, the next day they began their March, conducted by skilful and trusty Guides, having sent a Man post, before they set out, to the Governour, to give him notice that he should be relieved. This Person made such haste, that he arrived at Candahar before the Citadel was taken. There he learnt by some Spies the State of things; that the Moguls were no ways afraid of any Succours arriving, and the Besieged still made a vigorous Defence, but that they were not able to do so much longer.

Nisavi, p. 116.

Nisavi, p. 110.

Gelaleddin held a Council to consider what was to be done; and it was resolved to attack the Enemies in the dead of the night. In order to which, the Troops marched without being discover'd, and surprized the Moguls who were besieging the Citadel, having already taken and plunder'd the Town. They finding themselves briskly attack'd by Men who appear'd to be brave, and not knowing their Number, and at the same time by the Governour, who who came out of the Citadel upon them with all his Garison, suffer'd themselves, as one may say, to be kill'd without making any resistance; so much Power has Fear and Surprize over the Minds of Men, that it can intimidate the most Daring. In a few Hours the Town was seen full of dead Bodies of Moguls and Tartars; and Gelaleddin having had the Prudence to post Troops at all the Avenues of the City, few of those who thought to find Safety by Flight, escap'd the Sword of the Carizmeans. All the Mogul Army that was at Candahar perished. The Soldiers of the Sultan and Emin Melic, got the Booty the Enemies had acquir'd in their March thither; and had been greatly enriched, had they not been obliged to restore to the Inhabitants one part of what the Moguls had taken from them, when they plunder'd the City. After this good Success the Sultan endeavour'd to animate his Soldiers with further hopes. He repair'd Candahar, and return'd to Gazna, which he enter'd in triumph. Emin Melic engaged himself afresh to him, and promised never to abandon him, for which reason their Troops did not separate. And this Lord ever after show'd himself a good Relation, and a faithful Servant to Gelaleddin.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

CHAP. IV.

Prince Coutoucou's Expedition againſt the Sultan Gelaleddin. The Continuation of the Siege of Bamian.

Abulfarag. p. 293.

THE News of this Defeat was carried to Genghizcan by a Captain who had eſcaped from Candahar. This Prince was extremely afflicted, and reſolved to be revenged as ſoon as poſſible. In order to which, he cauſed the Attacks to be redoubled; but not being able to take Bamian ſo ſoon as he deſired, he determin'd to ſend Tulican againſt Gelaleddin with an Army of eighty thouſand Men. He was juſt going to ſend away this Detachment out of his Army, when another Courier arrived, to advertiſe him of the Revolt of the Country of Herat, in breach of the Treaty they had made with Prince Tulican. The Emperor was greatly enraged: He order'd this Prince to be called before him, and blamed him for not having put to the Sword all the Inhabitants of the City of Herat. 'I forbid you, ſaid he, ever 'to ſhow any mercy to my Enemies without 'an expreſs Order from me. Know henceforward, that Compaſſion reſides only in mean 'Souls; 'tis only Rigour that keeps Men in 'their Duty, and a vanquiſhed Enemy is not 'tamed, but will ever hate his new Maſter.' Then he bid him go and apply himſelf to the Duties of his Poſt as uſual, and named Coutou-

Fadlallah, p. 414.

Condemir, p. 9.

cou

cou Nevian to go againſt Gelaleddin. Coutou-cou departed at the Head of eighty thouſand Men. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

After his Departure, the Grand Can cauſed a Mount of Earth to be caſt up before the City in a Place where he deſign'd to make the fierceſt Aſſault; and they by his Order built Towers of Wood, the Height of which was equal to that of the Walls of the Place, to the end he might more conveniently incommode the Beſiegers with his Engines which were placed on the Platforms. He fear'd the Fire which the Beſieged threw, leſt it ſhould burn his Towers and Machines; but an Engineer promiſed to preſerve them, provided he would permit him to have every day kill'd as many Cows and Horſes as would cover the Works with their wet Skins, which the Emperor gave him leave to do; and by this means the Fire thrown from the City had no effect, becauſe it was extinguiſhed, or fell to the Ground, ſo ſoon as it came againſt the Skins, to which it would not ſtick or faſten. The Engines in the City did not fail to caſt down a great many of thoſe of the Moguls; and the Reſiſtance of the Beſieged being very obſtinate, becauſe their Walls were exceeding ſtrong, the Beſiegers at laſt began to be in want both of Stones and Wildfire: ſo that they ceaſed for ſome time to attack the City, becauſe they were obliged to ſend farther off for Flint-ſtones, Mill-ſtones, and other things proper to batter the Walls, and fling out of the Engines. When they renew'd their Attacks, the Beſieged made ſuch furious Sallies upon them, that they overthrew whole Squadrons of them, and ruined their Towers and Engines; and it is certain, that if the Emperor had not had ſo vaſt an Army, he had been obliged to raiſe the Siege.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

He was juſt returned to his Tent from making an Attack, when a Courier arrived from Coutoucou Nevian, who informed him that he was within a day's Journey of Gelaleddin, and gave him a particular Account of his March, and the Order he had made the Army to march in, to avoid ſeveral Ambuſcades that had been laid for him; and likewiſe in what manner the Enemy was encamp'd, of the number of their Troops, and in fine, of all that he had learnt by his Scouts. When the Grand Can underſtood that the Sultan Gelaleddin, with the Reinforcement of Turks that had join'd him, could make up an Army of ſixty thouſand Men, he ſeem'd much ſurprized; and this Supply made him apprehenſive leſt ſome other new ones ſhould arrive to join him, which might moleſt his Moguls.

In truth, Sultan Gelaleddin had received thirty thouſand Men more, which were brought him by three Lords of his Father's Court, who were join'd in League together, and dwelt in this Country in fortified Places. They told him that having learn'd the Mogul Emperor had ſent an Army towards the Frontiers of India to fight him, they were come to offer him their Aſſiſtance, and to join their Troops to his. He received them with much Joy, and proteſted he would never forget the Favour they had now done him. Theſe Captains were Turks, and had belong'd to the Sultana his Grandmother, and by conſequence were no Friends to Gelaleddin; but the Danger that threaten'd them if this Prince was conquer'd, made them reſolve to aſſiſt him.

Fadlallah, p. 415.

He

He put himſelf at the Head of his Army; and tho he very well knew the Moguls Army was by a fourth part ſuperior to his, yet he delay'd not to go and meet them. He came up with them juſt beyond a Town called Birouan, within a days Journey from Gazna, where they were entrenching themſelves. In truth, Coutoucou being inform'd that Gelaleddin's Troops, fluſh'd with the Succeſs they had had at Candahar, were marching towards him with great Vigour, judged it beſt to delay the time with them, and let them cool a little, rather than venture to provoke them to a Battel. But the Sultan broke all his meaſures to avoid fighting, and took the Advantage of the good Diſpoſition his Army was in; ſo he marched directly up to the Moguls, and reſolved to force them even in their Intrenchments. Coutoucou had advice of their coming by his Scouts; and not being willing that any ſhould have cauſe to reproach him that he had hid himſelf, and yet had an Army ſuperior to his Enemies, he cauſed them to march out of their Intrenchments, and went to meet the Sultan.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

Niſavi, p. 110.

The Battel of Birouan gained by Gelaleddin over the Moguls.

Fadlallah, p. 417.

The Moguls Vanguard, commanded by an Emir, immediately charged Gelaleddin's, which was led by Emin Melic, who overthrew the foremoſt Squadrons; but Coutoucou detached freſh Troops to ſupport his Vanguard, which routed that of the Enemy's. The Sultan immediately cauſed his main Body to advance, and putting himſelf at their Head, attack'd the Moguls in the Center, where Coutoucou was. The Shock was terrible, and during ſome hours both Sides had the Advantage by turns; but at laſt Victory declared herſelf on Gelaleddin's ſide. The Moguls were obliged to abandon the Field of Battel, and fled in diſorder, and all thoſe who re-remained not in the Field wounded or ſlain, retired to the Mountains.

Fadlallah, p. 418.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

The Sultan after the Action gave the Praiſes due to his Lieutenant Generals, and to others the Rewards they merited. They took a great number of Priſoners in the Fight; and 'tis ſaid of Gelaleddin, that having cauſed them to be all brought into his Preſence, he reproached them with their Cruelties, and cauſed Nails to be thruſt into their Ears, to revenge, as he ſaid, the Miſeries his Subjects had ſuffer'd for ſo long a time from the Moguls and Tartars.

Niſavi, p. 110.

There was, ſome days Journey from thence, a Party of Tartars who were beſieging a Fortreſs call'd Ouala; who when they heard the Event of the Battel at Birouan, raiſed the Siege, and fled.

The Defeat of the Moguls and Tartars was quickly known to the Emperor, who was ſtill before Bamian. This Prince grieved at the Loſs of ſeveral Officers whom he much valued, could not receive this News without being in a Paſſion. He was ſo enraged, that he ſwore the City of Bamian and the Sultan himſelf ſhould give him ſatisfaction. His Fury coſt the Life of one of his Grandſons, who expoſing himſelf, to pleaſe him, to the greateſt dangers, was kill'd by an Arrow ſhot from over the Walls of the City. This young Prince fell dead at his Grandfather's Feet. He was a Son of Prince Octai. The Emperor, who tenderly loved him, becauſe he diſcover'd in him all the Marks of good Conduct, was not proof againſt this Misfortune. He was mollified, groan'd, and mix'd his Tears with thoſe of the Mother of this young Prince, who was preſent, and bathed the Body of her dead Son with Tears, appearing like one diſtracted.

Mirconde, p. 40. Fadlallah, p. 420.

This

This Accident cost the Besieged very dear. The Grand Can recovering from his Extasy of Sorrow, endeavour'd to comfort this Lady, and left to her discretion the punishing the Inhabitants of this Place, the Reduction of which could not be far off. He lavished his Gold and Silver to encourage his Soldiers, who night and day continued the Assault, and at last ruin'd the Walls of the City in many Places, and made themselves Masters of Bamian. The bravest of the Officers and Soldiers of the Garison had already lost their Lives in defending the Place; the rest perished by the Swords of the Victors. The Mother of the young Prince who was killed, entering with the Mogul Soldiers into the City, and thirsting after Blood, could not be satisfy'd with Murders, but spared neither Age nor Sex. And far from suffering any to be saved for a Slave, this incensed Mother, or rather this Fury, caused the Throats of all the Inhabitants to be cut, without excepting one; and even gave Orders to rip up the Bellies of Women with Child, for fear there should remain alive one Infant of this unfortunate People. This was not all; for to assuage her Rage, the Beasts underwent the same Fate as the Men and Women, and she caused every living Creature to be kill'd. Besides which, even all the Mosques and Houses were pull'd down, the City became a heap of Ruins, and the Country round about a frightful Desart: Insomuch, that ever since this Misfortune Bamian has always born the Name of Maubalig, which signifies in the Mogul Language the unfortunate Dwelling.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Abulcair, p. 23.

Abulfarag. p. 293.

Octai was not in the Camp when his Son was killed, and the Emperor forbid that any Body should carry him the News, because he would him-himself tell it him; which he did in a very extraordinary manner. One day having called all his Family together, he pretended to talk of something in very unintelligible Terms; at last turning towards Octai, who did not understand nor made no answer to him, Whence comes it, said he, with a fierce Look, that you do not answer me when I speak to you? The Prince, believing the Emperor was angry, threw himself immediately at his Feet, and said, My Lord, if I have displeased you, put me to death, I will not murmur. The Grand Can made him repeat these Words three times; and asked him whether it was true that he so much fear'd to displease him. Yes, my Lord, answer'd Octai. Well then, reply'd the Emperor, hear me, and if you fear to displease me, take care not to disobey me: Muatou-Can your Son has been kill'd, and I forbid you to abandon your self to Grief. It was not without much pain that Octai obey'd a Command so contrary to Nature: However he constrained himself; and soon after, the Charge of an Expedition which his Father order'd him, diminished the afflicting Sense he had of the Loss of so dear an Object.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Mirconde, p. 40.

Fadlallah, p. 415.

Abulfeda, p. 19.

Bamian was situate in thirty four degrees and five minutes of Latitude, on a Mountain, whose Foot was water'd by a River which after having run thro another Mountain of that Country, from thence flows into the Oxus, and makes one Branch of this great River. This City was in the Province of Zabulestan, and the Capital of a small Country which bore its Name, ten days Journey from Balc, and eight from the City of Gazna. A Castle enclos'd with strong Walls, has been since built upon its Ruins.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

CHAP. V.

The Battel between Genghizcan and Gelaleddin. This Sultan's Paſſage to India.

BAMIAN being now no longer in a condition to retard the Grand Can's Conqueſt, and having no more Victims left to offer up to the Rage of his Daughter-in-Law; this Prince, impatient to come to Blows with Gelaleddin, marched his Army with ſo much Precipitation, that he hardly gave his Soldiers time to get ready their Victuals. And notwithſtanding the Loſſes he had had, his Army was ſtill ſo numerous, that he believed the Sultan would not dare to make head againſt him in the open Field, but expected to find him in the City of Gazna, knowing this Place was very ſtrong, and that Proviſions for a long Siege had been carried into it. Yet he did not find Gelaleddin there as he imagin'd. This Sultan had judged it proper to retire elſewhere, and to ſecure the narrow Paſſes of the Mountains and Brooks, to be the better able to manage to advantage the Troops he had. Fadlallah, p. 420. Abulfarag. p. 293. Mirconde, p. 40.

He was gone out of Gazna fifteen Days before the Moguls appear'd in that Country: but a vexatious Accident had happen'd in his Army after the Battel of Birouan; Diſcord began to get into his Army when the Booty was to be divided. The three Turkiſh Lords pretended that the beſt Spoils of the Moguls belong'd to them, Niſavi, p. 110.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe.

them, becauſe of the Succours they had brought. Emin Melic's Troops, who were now united with the Sultan's, were willing that the Booty ſhould be equally divided, and that the Cuſtom of War ſhould be follow'd. The Quarrel began about a very fine Arabian Horſe which one of the three Turkiſh Captains demanded, and the others refuſed to yield to him. Gelaleddin could never bring them to agree: ſo that the Turkiſh Lords retired with their Troops, and left him. This Deſertion did him much Injury: and the principal Reaſon that obliged him to go from Gazna, was to give time to his diſunited Troops to rejoin him, to oppoſe the common Enemy; and in reality he did all that was poſſible to bring the three Turkiſh Captains to hearken to Reaſon. He writ to them ſeveral times, and ſent Perſons who were his Friends, to repreſent to them, that they muſt periſh if they remain'd ſeparated from him; and that on the contrary, if they rejoin'd him, they might gain a Victory over Genghizcan, that would render them Maſters of all the Riches that Prince had amaſs'd together ever ſince the Carizmean War began. They at laſt ſuffer'd themſelves to be perſuaded, but too late; for the Grand Can having Knowledge of their Diviſion, and not doubting but the common Danger would reunite them, if he did not prevent it, detached from his Army ſixty thouſand Horſe to ſtop them in the way. Theſe Troops ſeized upon all the Paſſages by which theſe auxiliary Troops could march to join Gelaleddin, who finding himſelf deprived of this powerful Aid, retired towards the River Indus.

Niſavi, p. 110.

Some Authors take here an Opportunity to blame the Conduct of the Sultan of Carizme, in having always employ'd Turkiſh Commanders rather rather than those of their own Nation: yet we must confess that Gelaleddin, not being able since the Death of his Father to raise any considerable Army, found himself under a necessity of making use of these Troops. This Prince knowing that the Mogul Emperor swiftly pursued him, stopp'd on the Banks of the River Indus, in a Place where the Stream was most rapid, to the end that the Necessity of either conquering or dying might redouble his Soldiers Courage. He also believed that the Straitness of the Place where he was posted would deprive the Moguls of the Advantage of bringing up all their Army together to fight. He then mark'd out a Camp with all the Judgment imaginable. Since his Departure from Gazna he was tormented with a cruel Cholick, which gave him little rest, and would scarce permit him to go even in a Horse-Litter. Nevertheless, at the time when he suffer'd most, he saw himself obliged to mount on horseback, having learn'd that the Enemy's Vanguard was already arrived at a Place call'd Hardir. On this News he marched in the night with the bravest of his People, and surprized the Moguls in their Camp; he cut them almost all to pieces, without losing one Man, and then returned to his Camp on the Bank of the River Indus, with a considerable Booty.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Till this time Genghizcan had marched with all the Assurance of a Conqueror, who believed that Gelaleddin thought of nothing else than to find an Asylum; but after this last Action he always mistrusted this vigilant Enemy, and did every thing with a great deal of Circumspection. When he saw himself near the Sultan, he put his Army in Battel Array, giving the Command of the right Wing to Zagatai, the left to Octai, and put himself in the Center in the midst of six six thousand of his own Guards, stout veteran Troops, of whom he ever made use in his greatest Necessity.

Abulcair, p. 24.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Mirconde, p. 41.

On the other side, Gelaleddin being inform'd by his Scouts how the Enemies were ranged, immediately caused the Boats on the Indus to be sent farther off, to take from his Soldiers all hopes of Safety, reserving only one of the largest for the Security of the Ladies, and to carry over to India the Sultana his Mother, the Queen his Wife, and his Children: but by an unforeseen Misfortune the Boat split when they had occasion to embark, so that they remain'd in the Camp. The Army being ranged in Order of Battel, the Sultan reserved to himself the Command of the main Body of his Army. His left Wing, drawn up under the shelter of a Mountain, which hinder'd the Moguls Right from fighting them all together, was commanded by his chief Vizier, and his right Wing by Emin Melic. This Lord began the Fight, and gaul'd the Enemy's left Wing so, that they gave ground, notwithstanding all the Troops that sustain'd them. And the Moguls right Wing wanting room to extend it self, the Sultan made use of his Left, as of a Body of Reserve, and detached from time to time Squadrons to sustain the Troops that had occasion. He also took one part of them, when he went at the Head of his main Body to charge Genghizcan's. The Tartars at this shock sent forth most horrible Cries; but Gelaleddin's Soldiers were not startled, but following their Prince's Example, fell on them with so much Courage and Vigour, that they put the Moguls main Body into disorder. The Sultan open'd a broad way to penetrate even into the midst, where the Grand Can should have been; but this Prince

Nisavi, p. 110.

was

was not there. Having had a Horse kill'd under him, he had caused another to be brought him, and was retired to give Orders for all the Troops to engage. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

This Disadvantage had like to have lost the Moguls the Battel; for the News being spread all over the Army that the Sultan had broken thro the main Body, all the Troops were shocked, and had infallibly fled, if the Emperor had not immediately given Orders, and show'd himself publickly, riding from Place to Place. And, in fine, that which gain'd him the Battel, was, that having observed Gelaleddin had weaken'd his left Wing, he order'd Bela Nevian to go and attack it by some By-ways over the Mountain, which a Native of the Country told him was possible. In effect, Bela, conducted by this Guide, marched without losing many Soldiers, betwixt Rocks and dreadful Precipices, and fell upon the Sultan's left Wing behind, which being much weaken'd could not long resist. Fadlallah, p. 421.

The Victory is by one Author attributed to a Body of Horse composed of chosen Men, sirnamed Pehlevans, who, supported by ten thousand fresh Men, fell upon Gelaleddin's right Wing, which were at that time victorious, and defeated them, driving them back upon his main Body, against whom Genghizcan had renew'd the Charge. The Sultan's Troops, much fatigued with having fought ten whole Hours against more than three hundred thousand Men, were seized with Fear, and fled, and his eldest Son was made Prisoner in the Disorder. One part of the Troops retired to the Rocks which were on the Shore of the Indus, where the Enemy's Horse could not follow them; and many others, closely pursued by the Tartars, threw themMarrakeschy, p. 19.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

themselves into the River, which some of them happily cross'd over. Others placing themselves round their Prince, being sensible that there was no hopes left for them, continued the Fight.

Abulfarag. p. 293.

Mean time, the Emperor, desirous to take Gelaleddin alive, forbid that any should kill him; and in order to seize his Person, shut in this Sultan with his Army, which ranged themselves in form of a Bow, of which the River Indus represented the String. Gelaleddin used his Reason perfectly in this extreme Danger. And seeing that of thirty thousand Men whom he had at the beginning of the Battel, there remain'd scarce seven thousand, and that if he continued the Fight any longer, he should certainly fall alive into his Enemies hands, he began to think of his Safety. And having no other course to take than to cross over into India; and altho the River was very rapid in the Place he must cross to escape, yet he resolved to venture it. But before he put this Resolution in practice, he dismounted, and went to embrace his Mother, Wives, Children and Friends, and bid them an eternal Farewel. It is easy to imagine how moving a Sight this was: Nature and Love in this sad moment show'd itself in the most tender manner. Gelaleddin with Tears in his Eyes broke from those dear Objects of his Affection; and after having put off his Armour and Arms, except his Sword, Bow, and Quiver full of Arrows, he mounted a fresh Horse, and spurr'd him into the River, the Furiousness of whose Waves astonish'd the Beast so much, that he went not in but by Force. He was of such service to the Sultan in carrying him safely over, that in gratitude he had him carefully kept ever after, and would not even for Nisavi, p. 114.

Id. ib.

Marrakeschy, p. 19.

for four or five Years after ride him in any dangerous Action. An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horse.

Whilſt he was croſſing the Indus, Genghizcan being informed of it, ran to the Shore ſide, and was not a little ſurprized to ſee him braving the Fury of the Waves; but he was much more to ſee the Sultan, forgetful of the Danger his Life was in, ſtop in the midſt of the River to inſult him, and empty his Quiver of Arrows, which he ſhot againſt him and his Retinue. Several brave Mogul Captains would have thrown themſelves into the River to ſwim after Gelaleddin; but the Grand Can hinder'd them, telling them this Prince would diſappoint all their Attempts. Then putting his Finger on his Mouth, and turning towards his Children, he cried, 'Any Son ſhould wiſh to ſpring from ſuch a Father. He that dares defy ſuch Dangers as this Prince has now eſcaped, may expoſe himſelf to a thouſand others; and a wiſe Man who has him for his Enemy, muſt be always upon his guard.' Fadlallah, p. 422.

Mehemed Niſavi, Author of the Hiſtory of Sultan Gelaleddin's Life, reports, that the Sultan being ready to enter the River, and pierced with the Shrieks of thoſe he had took his leave of, who begg'd him to deliver them from being Slaves to the Moguls, commanded them to be drowned, and that this his Order was immediately executed. But other Hiſtorians, who have given a very full Relation of all that paſt in this Battel, make no mention of this Sultan's Family's being thrown into the Indus; but aſſure us that the Grand Can, after this Prince was paſt over, cauſed to be brought before him his Wives and all his Children, and order'd all the Males to be kill'd: and by this means the Sultan's eldeſt Son taken at the Rout of the Army, Marrakeſchy, p. 19.

An. Dom. 1221. Heg. 618. Mog. The Horſe. Fadlallah, p. 422.

Army, being eight Years old, loſt his Life.

The Emperor having learn'd that Gelaleddin had thrown into the River what Gold and Silver he had either in Plate or Money, had it ſearched for by the Divers, who took up a great part of it, of which he put into his Treaſury what was moſt rare and valuable, and diſtributed the reſt to his Army.

Ib. 423. Niſavi, p. 116.

Gelaleddin being got on the Shore of India, returned Thanks to God for having deliver'd him from the Dangers he had been expoſed to in the Battel, and thro the Rapidity of the River. He got up into a Tree to paſs the Night, and ſecure himſelf from the wild Beaſts, which were very numerous in this Country. The next day, as he was walking, much diſquieted in his Thoughts, on the Banks of the River, and looking about on every ſide to ſee if any of his People appear'd, who might have paſt over at ſome other Part of the River than that he croſs'd at, he perceived a Troop of Soldiers with ſome Officers, who at the firſt beginning of the Army's Defeat had found a Boat a-float, and ſeizing upon it, had ſail'd all Night with much danger, becauſe of the Rocks, Shelves, and Violence of the Current, which had drove them almoſt as low as where Gelaleddin croſs'd, tho they embark'd above a League higher than where the Battel was fought. Among theſe were three Officers his particular Friends, with whom a few days after he concerted Meaſures ſuitable to the Condition they were now reduc'd to. He ſoon after ſaw coming up to him three hundred Horſe, which he diſcover'd to be alſo ſome of his own Forces, at which he rejoiced as much as poſſible in the melancholy State he was in. They told him that four thouſand more of his Army had ſaved themſelves by ſwimming over, over, two Leagues from thence, by a Place in the River which was less rapid, but that they were naked, and so fatigued, that they look'd like Men just risen from the Grave. He went immediately to seek them, met, and caress'd them, assuring them of his Affection to them, and promised to provide for their Necessities. These unfortunate Creatures made him sensible, by the loud Acclamations of Joy they felt at the sight of him, that they were comforted for all the Ills they had suffer'd by his Presence alone. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

From this time all things succeeded happily to Gelaleddin. An Officer of his Houshold named Gemalarrazad, who was not present at the Battel because he was employ'd elsewhere, having knowledge that his Master was escaped, and that many of his People had past the River by swimming, ventured to load a very large Boat with all that he could find proper for the Sultan's Use, and cross'd over the Indus, and join'd Gelaleddin; who seeing that this Boat had brought Food, Money, Stuffs to clothe the Soldiers, Bows, Arrows, Swords, and many other things of which he stood in need, he thanked God for this so singular a Favour, and embraced this faithful Servant, making him great Steward of his Houshold, and sirnamed him Ectiareddin, which signifies the Chosen or the Glory of the Faith. Nisavi, p. 116.

As we have no design to write a compleat History of Sultan Gelaleddin, we shall only acquaint those who have a Curiosity to know what became of so great a Man, that he fought several Battels in Indostan, in which he was at first victorious; that he made Conquests and Alliances, but that his Prosperity excited Jealousy in many Princes of India, who judging he would one day or other give them trouble, Id. ibid.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

if they did not put a ſtop to his good Fortune, conſpired together againſt him, and obliged him to repaſs the Indus. Nevertheleſs there are Hiſtorians who ſay that his Departure from India was voluntary; and that this Prince being inform'd that Genghizcan was gone a great way from Perſia, and that there were Commotions in Tangut and China, hoping to recover by his Valour, and the Aſſiſtance of his Friends, a part of what he had loſt beyond the River Oxus, he left the Care of his Conqueſts in Indoſtan to one of his General Officers. But we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of this Prince again, and of his laſt Actions, before we finiſh this Book.

To return now to the Grand Can: he was much pleaſed at the Advantage he had gotten over Gelaleddin; but Grief ſucceeded his Joy, when, upon making a review of his Army, he ſaw it was conſiderably diminiſhed, and that he had loſt the Flower of his Soldiers, with a great number of his Officers. The Sieges of Talcan and Bamian, the haſty Marches he had made, and the Battel of Indus, which alone had coſt him twenty thouſand Men, all theſe had conſumed a great part of this formidable Army, whoſe Number and Strength had even aſtoniſhed Sultan Mehemed at Caracou. In fine, he found he had loſt two hundred thouſand Men ſince the Beginning of the Siege of Talcan, reckoning the two Bodies of Troops which Gelaleddin had defeated. Yet he neglected not to ſend Advice to the Governours of the Provinces and Generals of his Armies of his good Succeſs; and particularly to Hubbe and Suida, who had by this time finiſh'd the Conqueſt of Irac Agemi, otherwiſe called the Perſian Hircania, or Northern Perſia. He commanded them to make pubpublick Rejoicings; and at the same time gave them Orders to enter Azerbijana, or the Country of the Medes, so soon as the Spring came on, and to use all their Endeavours to bring this Kingdom under his Obedience. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

CHAP. VI.

The Reduction of Azerbijana, or the antient Media, to Genghizcan's Obedience. The Moguls War against the Georgians.

WHEN Suida Behadeur and Hubbe receiv'd Orders to enter into Azerbijana, they were in Winter-Quarters in Irac, at Senoravende, a City they had taken by Storm. And their Army being much weaken'd by reason of the great Garisons they had been obliged to put into several Places, they writ to some Tartar Captains who kept the open Country in Coraſſana to send them the best part of their Troops, and to raise more, and keep the Country they were in quiet. These Troops were no sooner on their March to go and join those with the two Generals, but the Mogul Captain who led them, met with a Carizmean called Tequin, who had under his Command three or four thousand Horse, and who some little time before had surprized and kill'd the Governour of Bocara. These Captains and their Troops fought, and the Mogul Captain had the better. He oblig'd Tequin to fly for Safety to the City of Jorgean, situate in Tabareſtan, whither Ainangecan, an Fadlallah, p. 424.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Officer of the Sultan of Carizme, was retired; and there he found them together in a Plain, with their Troops in Battel Array, between the Cities of Jorgean and Eſterabade. He there attack'd them, and after a ſharp Diſpute, in which Tequin was killed, the Mogul Officer remain'd Victor, and Ainangecan fled to Prince Cayeſeddin, who was Brother to the Sultan Gelaleddin, where he died ſoon after. This Action was in the beginning of the Year of our Lord 1222. and of the Hegira 619.

The victorious Troops join'd themſelves to thoſe under Hubbe and Suida about the end of March this Year. After which, theſe two Generals marched toward Ardebile, a ſtrong City, and a Place of great Trade, ſituate within two Leagues of the Mountain of Savelane, which was at that time cover'd with Snow. This City was in the thirty eighth degree of Latitude, and was the Arſacia of the Antients.

Olearius's Voyages, p. 284.

The Inhabitants refuſed at firſt to open their Gates, and ſeem'd determined to defend the Place; but their Courage did not anſwer their Pride, for after ſome Reſiſtance they ſurrender'd at diſcretion. The Moguls killed the greateſt part of the People, and plunder'd and burnt the City; ſince which it has been rebuilt, and is at preſent one of the fineſt in the Perſian Empire. 'Twas in Ardebile that the famous Chec Sefy, the Head of the Royal Family of Sefevi's, which at this time fills the Throne, was born, and here his Tomb was erected; which for its Magnificence ſurpaſſes the moſt pompous Sepulchres of the Kings who have been ſince buried there[1].

When

[1] The Perſians believe that Chec Sefy did ſpring from the Race of Aly Mahomet's Son-in-Law, and that he deſcended from

When Hubbe and Suida had taken Ardebile, they went to Tauris, the Capital of Azerbijanal. The Governour, who was a Man of Courage, resolved to make a stout defence. He refused them every thing they demanded. He sallied out of the City himself with his Soldiers, and knowing the Country better than the Enemies, he tired and fatigued them by an infinite number of Skirmishes, and drew them into the Ambushes he laid for them; and if he had not been too confident of his good Fortune, the Moguls had had a great deal of Trouble to subdue him. But at last they forced him to a pitch'd Battel in the open Field, in which he was beaten, but escaped to Tauris with the Troops that were able to follow him; and there getting together all the Soldiers he had left, he flatter'd himself he should be able to sustain a long Siege: which he had perhaps done, if the Inhabitants, not daring any more to trust in their Strength after the ill Success he had had in the Battel, had not forced him immediately to make Propositions for Peace to the Mogul Generals, who easily consented to them, fearing lest the Georgians, who were esteem'd the most valiant People of all Asia, should declare for the Inhabitants of Tauris. So they agreed on a Sum of Money, which was paid by the City, and a certain quantity of Corn and Cattle for the Moguls Subsistence.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

---

from Huseyn the Son of Aly in a direct Line, by one named Imam Mousa, the seventh of the twelve Imams who succeeded him. And thus they do not scruple to affirm that their Kings are of the Race of their false Prophet Mahomet as well as the Kings of Morocco, who pretend to be likewise descended from Mahomet by Hasan the second Son of Aly.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Tauris was situate in thirty eight degrees of Latitude. Several Authors believe it was the Ecbatana of the Antients, the Capital of the Kingdom of the Medes[2]. Let that be as it will, all the Advantage it at present enjoys consists in its being the principal City of Azerbijana, now a Province of the Persian Empire. Its Outside is very agreeable, its Buildings very fine, its Mosques are magnificent: there are likewise Colleges and publick Baths.

The Moguls after this returned into Irac Agemi towards Ispahan[3], where they were informed there were some Commotions; but he who was the Author of them had been already punished, even by those who were the chief Promoters of it, and persuaded him to it. They did not make the Town suffer any Chastisement for these Disorders, but were content to take only the usual Duties for the War, and past a part of the Winter in hunting in this Country, according to Custom.

The Georgians, fearing to be in their turn attacked by the Moguls, held a Council at Tessis their Capital City, to consult what they had to do. There were some who, desirous to prevent this Misfortune, proposed to make an Alliance with Genghizcan; but the Majority were of opinion that it was best to secure themselves by their Swords. Thus War was resolved on;

Abulfeda, p. 201.

[2] Others assure us it is Hamadan that was the antient Ecbatana. Abulfeda, p. 191.

[3] There is much probability that this City of Ispahan was the Aspa of Ptolomy, altho some pretend it was the Grecian Hecatompilos, built by the Greeks in the Parthians Country where Alexander resided. It is at present the Capital of the Persian Empire, and situated in thirty two degrees and twenty five minutes of Latitude.

and

and they immediately got into the Field ten thousand Horse under the Command of a very experienced Captain who had made War with Sultan Mehemed the King of Carizme with good Success. The Desire they had for Action did not permit them to wait the coming of the Spring. They enter'd in the midst of Winter into Azerbijana, to go in search of the Moguls whom the two Generals had left there; but they found more Troops than they expected, for all the Garisons had joined: and the Georgians, after having been twice worsted in two Rencounters, returned to Teflis. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

But having thus declared War against the Moguls, they imagined they should soon have been pursued by them. For which reason they sent Deputies to all their Neighbours to ask their Assistance, but none would lend them any; for which cause they sent out strong Parties, and molested all those who favour'd the Moguls, or submitted to them. Hubbe and Suida, tho the Distance was so far between the Place they were at and this, sent Troops against the Georgians; and when the Season would permit, march'd themselves with all their Forces, returning into Azerbijana, and thence enter'd into Georgia; but they found all the Passages stopp'd, a few being able to defend them against many. They chose rather to defer to attack them, than to run the risque of sacrificing their Soldiers perhaps to no purpose. Fadlallah, p. 429.

During these Transactions they received Advice that the Inhabitants of Maraga had assisted the Georgians. To revenge themselves, they set down before their City, took, and plunder'd it. Maragra was situate in thirty seven degrees and twenty minutes of Latitude, within seventeen Leagues of Tauris to the Westward in the same Pro-

An. Dom. 1222. Province. 'Twas a modern built City, found-Heg. 619. ed by Order of the Calif Merouane, and was Mog, The Sheep. very conſiderable both for its Trade and fine Situation [4].

After the taking of Maraga, the Moguls went to refreſh themſelves at Ardebile: There they learn'd that ſome of the Sultan's Relations had excited a Revolt at Hamadan, and that even the Governour of the City was one of the Revolters. At the ſame time it was reſolved that Hubbe ſhould go and appeaſe theſe Troubles, whilſt Suida continued in Azerbijana to obſerve the Inhabitants of Tauris, with whom they had reaſon to be diſpleaſed, becauſe they had ſecretly aſſiſted the Georgians. Hubbe being arrived before Hamadan, and Gemaleddin the Governour ſeeing himſelf abandon'd by all the reſt of the Revolters, ſent Deputies to the Mogul General to aſſure him of his Obedience, and to preſent him all that he thought worthy his Acceptance. But his Preſents and Submiſſion avail'd him nothing: Hubbe was inexorable, and would abſolutely have him yield at diſcretion. The Governour was going to ſatisfy his Commands, if a Captain named Faquihi had not hinder'd him. Faquihi excited the People to defend him, and prevail'd. They put him at the head of the Troops that were in the City, and he was ſo bold as to ſally forth and attack the Moguls. They repulſed him ſmartly, and all he could do

[4] It was in the Suburbs of Maraga that the illuſtrious Naſſir Eddin Touſy, accompanied with ſome other Aſtrologers, made his Obſervations and his Ephemerides, by the Order of Halacou King of Perſia, and Grandſon to Genghizcan, who there built for him a magnificent Obſervatory. There are few Ephemerides in the Levant more eſteem'd than this Aſtrologer's.

was

was to get back into the Place. A great number of Tartars entering promiſcuouſly with his Soldiers, ſeized the Gates, and made themſelves Maſters of Hamadan. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

After which, Hubbe returned back, and marched againſt Tauris with Suida; but the Governour of this City, inform'd of their Deſign by ſome hired Spies, ſent them the Tribute that he owed, by Perſons of Addreſs, who juſtified him ſo to theſe Generals, that the Moguls, inſtead of continuing their March to Tauris, went to Selmas and to Couy, to ſubdue theſe Cities, which were at the fartheſt part of Azerbijana, on the Weſt Side [5].

They had no ſooner taken and plunder'd them, than they turned their Arms to the North, and went to Naſchivan a City of Aran, ſituate between Azerbijana and Armenia. This Place was treated like the others, yet with leſs Rigour than Pilcan, which alſo lay in Aran, and was the chief Place of Trade in all the Province. Pilcan being a Town well fortify'd, it coſt the Enemy a great deal of time to take it, who to revenge themſelves for this Reſiſtance, committed moſt cruel Actions. Gangea, another City of Aran, was more fortunate, for it immediately open'd its Gates, which was the reaſon no damage was done to its Inhabitants.

The Moguls were in this laſt mention'd City, when they were informed by ſome Spies that a great number of Georgians were preparing to come and attack them. On this Advice they reſolved to wait their coming in the Province of Aran; and these Generals agreed that, when the Enemy was not far off from them, Hubbe should put himself in ambuscade with five thousand chosen Men, and that Suida should march with the gross of the Army as if he went to give them battel, but that as soon as they appear'd, he should leave his Baggage, and retire with Precipitation, yet without Disorder, and in such a manner that he could face about at a Signal which Hubbe should give him in coming out of his Ambuscade, to the end the Georgians might be charged both before and behind at the same Instant.

[5] Theſe two Cities were no farther than ſeven Leagues off from one another, and Selmas is to this day very famous for the Commerce there carry'd on.

of

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Fadlallah, p. 429.

This Design being executed as it was agreed, the Enemy took Suida's Retreat for a real Flight, and pursued him. Hubbe coming out of his Ambuscade, these two Generals cut the Georgians in pieces, who in this one day lost thirty thousand Men. The rest escaped back to Georgia; where they were hardly arrived, when News was spread over the Country that the Moguls were coming to besiege Teflis; on which account Terror seized the Inhabitants of this City, and those on the Frontiers, whom the Moguls Approach caused to fly farther up into the Country. Yet notwithstanding the Fright the People were in, the Commanders and Soldiers knowing the Difficulty of the Ways and Lanes, ran to guard them; and the Moguls met with so many Turnings and narrow Lanes, that they were disheartened, and immediately retreated. 'Tis said that in this Juncture a Mogul who advanced too far was made Prisoner, and that his own Misfortune and the Shame of seeing his Companions retire back, so afflicted him, that he kill'd himself.

Abulfeda, p. 193.

Teflis is situate in forty three degrees of Latitude. It was a great trading City, where there were were Baths of hot Water so excellent for Health, that Abulfeda the Geographer compares them to those of Tiberias in Palestine. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

CHAP. VII.

Genghizcan's Employments during the Expedition of the Generals Hubbe and Suida in Azerbijana, and what the other Generals of the Army did.

AFTER the Battel of Indus, thro the Severity of the Winter, Genghizcan was obliged to take up his Quarters on the Frontiers of India, and to let his Army rest, which was extremely fatigued. After he had a little recover'd them, he order'd a Hunting, which lasted one part of the Season. But when he saw the Spring approaching, he distributed to his Lieutenants, that they might continue to make new Conquests, those of his Troops who were in good Condition, and kept the rest that were most out of order to manage himself. Fadlallah, p. 430.

He sent into the Country of Herat, which had revolted, fourscore thousand Men under the Command of Ilencou Nevian, and order'd him to watch the Motions of the thirty thousand Malecontents who had abandon'd Gelaleddin's Army, after having so bravely fought the Battel of Birouan. He sent away twenty thousand Men under the Command of Bela, to the Country of Multane, to resist the Sultan if he appear'd on that side the Country.

He

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

He charged his Son Octai to go with the Troops under his Command and conquer Gazna, and to chastise the Inhabitants of that City for having supplied his greatest Enemy with Succours. He gave to Zagatai sixty thousand Tartars to go into the Provinces of Sende and Quirman, to shut up these Countries from the Sultan. A needless Precaution! for Gelaleddin was returned into Quirman so soon as he heard the Emperor was got into Mogolistan.

The Grand Can, on the receit of some Letters from China, resolved to quit the Provinces of Persia to return nearer to the Oxus, where they informed him that his long Absence had caused the Chinese to grow every day more insolent, and wish nothing more than to see China again governed by its natural Prince; that they seem'd disposed to revolt, and follow the Example of Chidascou the Can of Tangut, who, seconded by the Moguls secret Enemies, had surprized the City of Campion, in spite of the Resistance made by the Governour. On this Information Genghizcan sent Orders to his Brother Utakin, and went up as far as Candahar with the Remainder of his Troops, besieged and took this City, and there waited a long time, expecting to hear News of his Army.

The taking of Candahar.

Abulfeda, p. 171.

The City of Candahar was situate in thirty three Degrees of Latitude. It was an antient City, and the Capital of a Province of that Name. Several Historians will have it to be one of those which Alexander caused to be built in those Parts, and named Alexandria. Geographers are divided as to its Situation; some place it in the Country of Sende, others in India, and others in Persia: and the Kings of both these last mention'd Countries willingly crecrediting the Opinion of those Writers who favour their Pretensions to it, fail not alternately to seize of this City every time an Opportunity presents, and plead that it belongs to him, whoever gets it. The Trade this City carries on with the three Countries before-mention'd, to which it serves as a Frontier-Town, makes the Inhabitants very rich. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Multane, a City in India, situate in twenty nine degrees and forty minutes of Latitude, fell also some time after into the Moguls Hands by the Valour of Bela Nevian; but this General did not go so far as Labor, as he was order'd, because he knew there was in that Place a stronger Army than his. A Patan, named Cobadia, had sent those Forces there, believing he ought rather to provide against the Moguls and Tartars than against Gelaleddin, tho this Sultan was in Arms even then on the Frontiers of his Country. 'Tis true, Gelaleddin was not in a condition to be much fear'd, having so few Troops with him; nor had he done any thing but made a slight Irruption on the Territories of a Prince named Rana, who had insulted him, and whom he kill'd. Abulfeda, p. 169. The taking of Multane. Nisavi's Life of Gelaleddin, p. 117.

Ilencou executed the Orders he had received concerning Herat with much Cruelty. We have already related how the People of this Country had made peace with Tulican, who gave them a Governour; but loving their native Prince extremely, and the Mahometan Religion, which indeed was the strongest Motive, they soon revolted from the Moguls, and threw off their Yoke so soon as they saw their Prince appear, and tumultuously killed Aboubequir who govern'd them, put to the sword all those who took Genghizcan's part in that City, and chose a Governour named Moubarezeddin. This Action Fadlallah, p. 430.

was

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

was done at the time when the thirty thouſand Malecontents joined the Sultan; for the Inhabitants of the Country of Herat, ſeeing ſo fine an Army under their Prince's Command, believed his Affairs would take a better turn, and that he would be re-eſtabliſhed, and ſo thought they might revolt with Impunity.

Prince Coutoucou had immediately received orders to chaſtiſe them; but having been beat at Birouan, the Emperor had been obliged to defer his Vengeance for ſome time. At laſt he ſent Ilencou to Herat with orders to ruin all the Country, and to deſtroy the thirty thouſand Men who had aſſiſted the Sultan. This General employ'd ſix whole Months in acquitting himſelf of this Commiſſion; and being ſenſible that the more Cruelty he ſhow'd, the more his Maſter would be pleaſed with him, he ſet all on fire, and fill'd with Blood all the City and Country. The Moguls boaſted they had killed above ſixteen hundred thouſand Perſons, comprehending the thirty thouſand Malecontents which Ilencou had orders to fight, and which he entirely defeated, tho with much difficulty.

Octai alſo ſet out from the Borders of India to go to the Country of Gazna, to execute the Emperor's Orders. He was no ſooner arrived there, but he exerciſed all ſorts of Cruelties; not that this Prince was naturally bloody, but he knew his Father was ſo, and that he hated theſe People, to whom he imputed the Loſs of his Armies: in truth, they had always aſſiſted the Sultan Gelaleddin as much as they were able. After Octai had got poſſeſſion of all the Places in this Country that were of leaſt Strength, he ſat down before the principal City, at that time called Daralmulke, or the Royal City, becauſe it had been the Capital of the Kingdom of the Children of Subuctequin, who had heretofore poſſeſs'd both the Empires of Perſia and India. This City, which is now called Gazna, was furniſhed with all things neceſſary to ſuſtain a Siege; and beſides a ſtrong Gariſon, Gelaled-din had placed there a very brave and experienced Man for their Governour. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

This Governour repreſented to the Inhabitants that the Mogul Emperor hated them more than all the reſt of the Sultan's Subjects; that they ought not to expect any Mercy from a Prince who was both an Idolater and a cruel Perſon; that he had ſworn their Ruin, and that by conſequence it was in vain for them to imagine to melt or ſoften him by any Submiſſions: in fine, he ſo well animated the People of Gazna againſt Genghizcan, that they all reſolv'd to loſe their Lives in the Defence of their City, rather than vainly ſue to him. Nor did they by their Actions bely their Words, or act below this generous Reſolution. They made frequent Sallies, and with good Succeſs, upon the Labourers, and ſeveral times overthrew their Works. They twice beat down the Mounts of Earth the Enemies raiſed to place their Engines on; they broke above a hundred of their Battering-Rams. But all theſe Attempts proved uſeleſs, for one night, after an obſtinate Fight they had had in the day time, in which Octai himſelf had fought in Perſon to encourage his Soldiers, who began to be daunted, one ſide of the Walls of the City fell down, and unfortunately filled up the Ditch with its Ruins, ſo that a great number of the Moguls and Tartars enter'd with eaſe into the Place Sword in hand. The Governour perceiving how much this Accident had daſhed the Inhabitants Courage, and and that he could not long ſuſtain the Moguls Attacks, reſolved to die like a gallant Man; and putting himſelf at the head of the braveſt of his Soldiers, charged amidſt the thickeſt of the Enemies, where he and all with him were ſlain, after having killed many of the Enemies. Nevertheleſs the City of Gazna was not entirely ruin'd, nor did all its Inhabitants periſh, like thoſe of ſome other Cities we have mentioned: for the plundering it did not laſt above four or five Hours, Octai cauſing it to ceaſe, and taxing the Inhabitants who were left alive, at a certain Sum, which they gave to buy the City off from being burnt, and themſelves from Death. This Prince continued in this City till ſuch time as all the Province was reduced to the Obedience of the Emperor his Father, whom he afterwards went to join in Tartary, to give an account of his Conduct.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Prince Zagatai's Expedition into the Country of Quirman.

When Prince Zagatai was come into the Country of Quirman with his numerous Army, he took by degrees all the Places in that Country, according to the Orders he had received from the Grand Can, who being well informed of the Unhealthfulneſs of this Province, had charged him to take great care of the Soldiers. The Capital City was called Quirman. It was ſituate in thirty degrees of Latitude. The Antients called this Province by the Name of Carmania. It had on the Weſt Perſia, on the Eaſt Sende, on the South the Indian Sea, and on the North Coraſſana. When he was poſſeſs'd of Quirman, he led his Troops into Mecran, which formerly was compriz'd in this Province, but at this time made a part of Sende.

After being ſeized of Tiz, which was one of the beſt Cities, ſituate in twenty ſix degrees of Latitude, and of some other Places which he destroy'd, he past the Winter in Quelanger, a Country situate on the Borders of the Indies. As he designed to stay a long time in this Place, the Soldiers made themselves a great number of Houses. There were some who even got very fine Flocks of Sheep; and they subsisted with greater ease, because the Prince had made the Quarters for the Troops of so great an extent, that they did not incommode one another. Every Soldier had his Slaves who served him. The Troops employ'd themselves in cultivating Gardens, and began to solace themselves as if they had been in a Country which they supposed was going to be divided amongst them, and which they were to settle in for the rest of their Lives. But being in a Country whose Climate was very different from that they were born in, when the scorching Winds customary in this Place, began to blow, they fell sick almost all of them, and a great number died; and the greatest part of those that lived, remain'd so weak and languishing, that if the Sultan had then had any Army to oppose them, it is not to be doubted but he had entirely ruined this of the Moguls.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

The Advantages the Persians gain'd from their Sickness, were, that their Enemies could not attack the Country of Fars, nor one part of Couzistan, which according to the Disposal the late King of Carizme made of his Kingdoms, belong'd to Cayaseddin, Sultan Gelaleddin's younger Brother. It contain'd strong Cities, which would have defended themselves. Thus Cayaseddin escaped the Tartars for the present. Zagatai judging his Troops unable to execute his Designs, made them several times remove from one Place to another to recover them; and to eaſe them, order'd that the greateſt part of the Slaves whom they had taken in the neighbouring Places, ſhould be put to death, becauſe they were a burden to the Soldiers who were charged with the care of them. In one day then theſe miſerable Slaves had all their Throats cut. After which the Army encamped in a more temperate Country: The Change of Air and good Treatment cured the Sick; ſo that in a little time Zagatai having received Orders to repair to the Grand Can with his Troops, found them in a condition to march. He put Gariſons into the Cities and Countries he had conquer'd, and committed the whole Government of them all to one of his Lieutenants. After which, he march'd Northward, and made one part of his Army go along the Borders of India, under the Conduct of a Lieutenant General, and with the reſt he himſelf croſs'd over the Countries to go for Balc, where the general Rendezvous was appointed.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

CHAP. VIII.

Genghizcan's Return from the Country of Iran to the Country of Touran, that is, from Perſia to Tartary.

THE Emperor having decamp'd from before Candahar, continued to march to the Oxus. He paſt the reſt of the Summer of the Year 1222. on this ſide of that River, in a Place whoſe Pleaſantneſs and Beauty invited him him to ſtay there, till the return of his Generals. Whilſt he was there, Deputies came from Balc to wait on him; he order'd them to ſend him ſome Men of Skill, who were able to inform him of all the Particularities of their Country. They obey'd; and ſoon after their return, ſeveral learned Perſons arrived at the Court. The Grand Can confer'd with them concerning the Antiquities of Balc, and Bactriana, and they inform'd him of all they knew. An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

Nor did he omit to talk with them about Zoroaſter, whom the Orientals call Zerideſcht Behram. They told him that this great Man had been King of their Country, and that he alone of all Mankind had laugh'd when he was born; that it was he who firſt ſtudied the Motion of the Stars, and invented Magick; that he had a great number of Followers, who became ſo well verſed in thoſe Arts, that they had the Titles of Wiſemen and Philoſophers, and that he himſelf was called the King of the Magi; laſtly, that he had no other Prieſts but them to teach and improve the Religion of the Worſhippers of Fire, who were the Medes, Perſians, and Bactrians, who all had ſome of thoſe Magi in their Countries. Their chief Imployment was to ſee that every particular Perſon or Family preſerved the conſecrated Fire in their Houſes, ſo that it did not go out. Theſe Idolaters had in every Province a great and magnificent Temple for the publick Exerciſe of their Religion. There are ſome Authors who affirm, that in Azerbijana this Fire, which was ſo rever'd, burnt for the ſpace of ſeven hundred Years without Intermiſſion. Theſe Temples were called Ateſchkede; and there are to be ſeen at this day the magnificent Remains of theſe great Buildings.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

The Grand Can received Letters from Schidaſchou the Can of Tangut, who made him offers of Submiſſion, and to be tributary to him, if he would pardon what was paſt. A Council was held on this Subject, and it was reſolved an Anſwer ſhould be ſent him that his Offers were accepted, becauſe they were not willing he ſhould form any more Enterprizes; ſo that the Emperor might make himſelf Maſter of Mogoliſtan after he had finiſhed all his Affairs in Perſia and Tartary. It was alſo agreed he ſhould paſs over the Oxus, to daunt all the People who had any Inclination to rebel. With this deſign he preſs'd the return of his Troops, and ſent to his Generals to ſet out immediately from the Places where they now were to follow him, after having put good Gariſons and able Governours into the Places requiſite. After this he paſt over the Oxus with the Troops he had with him, and went to Bocara, where ſome had already begun to make Reparations. One Hiſtorian ſays he went directly to Samarcand: But thoſe who ſay it was to Bocara, prove it by a Converſation which was found in Writing, between the Emperor, the Cady, and the Catibe, that is to ſay, the Orator of the City. Theſe two Men were ſent to him to give him an Account of their Religion and Laws, as he deſired: Theſe Doctors, ſays one, being come into his Preſence, he asked them what their Faith was, in general Terms; they anſwer'd, That they believed, as all the Mahometans did, there was but One God, and that this God did create all things, and had no Equal. The Grand Can told them he believed the ſame. Then he asked them what was their Opinion of Mahomet; they anſwer'd that God had ſent this Prophet to his Servants with his Seal, and Orders to instruct them in the Laws they must follow, both as to what is permitted, and what is forbidden them. Genghizcan approv'd this Answer, and said, I believe it, since I, who am but the Servant of God, do daily send Ambassadors into divers Countries, and even to my own Subjects, to make my Pleasure known to them. The two learned Men after this entertain'd him on the Subject of Prayers, and the Times in which it was their Custom to pray daily. This Institution he liked very well, as also that of Fasting, which the Mahometans observe in the Month of Ramadan: As to which he told them that it was but reasonable they should use some Abstinence for one Month's space, since all the rest of the Year they drank and eat what they pleased, and past whole Nights in Debauches, nay, even in this Month of Ramadan, altho they called it out of respect the Venerable. He also approved that a Man should distribute to the Poor a part of his Goods; for example, that of twenty Ducats of Gold, he should give them the half of one. But when these Doctors told him that the Mussulmans were obliged to have Temples or Mosques to worship God in, and that they called these Mosques the Houses of God, where they ought to pray, and render him their Homage; he told them, that the whole World was the House of God, and that he heard the Prayers of Men in all Parts of the World. He asked many other Questions of the Orator and Cady of Bocara concerning their Customs. After which, they returned to their Houses, and affirmed that Genghizcan had Sentiments very conformable to theirs, and that he might be reckon'd of the number of the Mussulmans. Nevertheless the Orator was not pleased with the Answer this Prince gave concerning the Temples, because it maintain'd that there was no need of them; which was to deny that a Man was obliged to perform a Pilgrimage to Mecha, since Men went not thither but to worship God at Quiabe, which is his chief Temple, according to the Mahometan's Belief.

An. Dom. 1222. Heg. 619. Mog. The Sheep.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

The Grand Can did nothing at Bocara worthy mentioning. He past the Winter there, the Season not permitting him to march so great an Army so far as from the Country of Balc to Samarcand, whither he went not till the Year of our Lord 1223, and of the Hegira 620[a]: and then he sent his Troops before, and order'd them to treat the People gently, and to use no Violence to them; but to be content with what was order'd them for their Subsistence, by those who had the care of it; in a word, to live as they ought in a Country belonging to him. They punctually observ'd these Orders. The Emperor soon follow'd his Army with all his Houshold. Presents were made him in every Place he pass'd thro; and as soon as they learn'd he was near Samarcand, the chief Merchants and principal Officers of the Country came out to meet him, with rich Presents, which he receiv'd very graciously. They assur'd him, by the Mouth of their Orator, of their Fidelity: And he ever after treated them with Kindness, as a People whose Affection to him he believed sincere and unfeigned.

When he was come into his Tent, he enter'd into Conversation with the Deputies whom the City had sent to welcome him: He recounted to them all the Transactions between him and

---

[a] Lewis VIII. began at this time to reign in France.

the

the two Sultans, and particularly imputed to Mehemed all the Ills the Empire had suffer'd, as being the sole Cause of them. He even gave them the Detail of the Victory he had gain'd over Gelaleddin; and after having told them that they had now no other Emperor but himself, he declared to them, that it was to him they ought for the time to come to address their Requests, and make Prayers for him in the Mosques, which he call'd, making the Coutbe in his Name; and that He alone ought to be the Subject of their Praises. He past the greatest part of this Year at Samarcand, in settling the Affairs of his Empire, and in giving time to his Troops, which he expected from very remote Parts, to come up to the Place he had appointed. He at this time made several Regulations, which he annexed to his other Laws: And being now something at ease, he forgot not any thing that he thought would conduce to the Preservation of his Kingdoms. He resolved to hold a General Diet at Toncat in the beginning of the Year following, that is, in 1224, and of the Heg. 621. For this Reason he sent his Orders into all the Provinces, to the Princes his Children, the Governors, and Generals of the Army: Nay, he desired Suida and Hubbe should be there also, and therefore sent them word to come to Toncat by the way of Capschac, after having pass'd by Derbende, that is to say, by the Caspian Gates. But he commanded them, above all things, to follow the Orders of Touschican his Son, who was then in Capschac, or that great Western Tartary situate on this side the River Jaxartes, and reaching even to Muscovy, as has been before mentioned.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620 Mog. The Monkey.

An. Dom. 1223.
Heg. 620.
Mog. The Monkey.

CHAP. IX.

The Generals Hubbe and Suida's Expedition to the Kingdom of Schirouane: Their Travels by Derbende, or the Caſpian Ports.

HUBBE and Suida had no ſooner receiv'd the Grand Can's Orders, but they prepared to execute them; and after having ſettled what Methods they ſhould take to paſs into Caſchac, on the weſtern ſide of the Caſpian Sea, they ſent ſome before to view the Roads and Paſſages, who brought back word to them, That there was nothing but Rocks and Precipices, ſo that it was impoſſible to paſs any other way than by the Straits of Derbende. But the two Generals having learn'd that the King of Schirouane was Maſter of them, and that none could paſs that way without his leave, they march'd directly into his Country, where they had not yet been, altho it was a part of the Country of Azerbijana, the reſt of which they had already conquer'd. They conceal'd this their Deſign, and pretended only, that they went to eſtabliſh the Grand Can's Empire there, as well as in the other Parts of Aſia. They firſt beſieg'd Schamaqui, a City ſituate in 40 Degrees 50 Minutes of Latitude, and ſoon took it.

They there treated the People rigorouſly, becauſe they had reſiſted them: But afterwards, to gain the King of Schirouane's good Will, they said publickly, that Genghizcan desired of this Prince only a slight Acknowledgement of his Submission, and a small Tribute. The King refus'd to pay the Tribute, but the Generals did not much trouble themselves about that, having no other Design but cunningly to obtain from him a Passage by Derbende. They spared the Country of Schirouane, and made their Soldiers live very regularly. They even punished several for having abus'd the People. They sent Presents to the King, and receiv'd also some from him: But when they proceeded to ask him to give them the Liberty to pass by the way of Derbende into Tartary, and that he perceived that this was the only Aim to which all their Civilities tended, and the Motives of the respectful Treatment they had given his People, he gave off answering their Compliments, and believed that they only sought how to seize on this important Passage, to hold all the Country in Subjection, and drive him out of his Kingdom. For this Reason, when they again press'd him importunately for leave to pass by the Straits of Derbende; he answer'd them, That this did not lie in his power, since the People who inhabited these Straits, did not acknowledge any one for their Master; and were so jealous, that they would not suffer more than ten Men at a time to pass that way, and those Men too must not be Strangers or suspected Persons. Notwithstanding this Answer, the Moguls, after having used Intreaties to no purpose, proceeded to Threats, and told the King of Schirouane, That since they found that nothing could be obtain'd from him by fair means, whatever Assurances they gave him of their Sincerity, they now declar'd to him, that they not only expected that the Gates of those

ſaid

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

Straits

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

Straits ſhould be open'd to them to paſs thorow, to return into their own Country thro the Countries of the Alani, Tartary, and Capſchac, according to the Orders that had been given them; but moreover, that his Officers ſhould be their Guides. The King having conſider'd of it, granted the Mogul Generals their Demands.

After fifteen Days March, during which they went above forty Leagues by the Woods, Rocks and narrow Paſſages of Mount Caucaſus, the Mogul Army, led by the King of Schirouane's Guides, arriv'd ſafely at Derbende, having paſs'd thro thoſe Straits, not without Admiration of the Manner, Nature and Art had wrought together for the Defence of this Paſſage. Hubbe and Suida freely confeſt, that it was not to be forced. The very Walls, which were ſix Foot thick, were made of a certain Matter compoſed of Lumps of Gravel and Shells pounded together, which was much harder than any kind of Stone whatſoever.

This Paſſage was call'd by the Antients Portæ Caſpiæ, or the Caſpian Gates; and the Word Derbende in Perſian properly ſignifies, The Faſtnings of the Gates. It is ſituate in 43 Degrees of Latitude, betwixt the Caſpian Sea and a Mountain of the ſame Name, by which one muſt of neceſſity paſs to go into Tartary, to the Alani, the Circaſſians, and the People of Capſchac, when one comes from Irac, Azerbijana, Syria, and Armenia. There is between the Sea and the Mountain a Space a quarter of a League broad; in this Space were built, at three or four hundred Paces from one another, two thick Walls, founded on the Rock, and reaching from the Mountain to the Sea; ſo that all Paſſengers were obliged to paſs thro by the Iron Gates Gates which were in these Walls. The Space taken in by these Walls made a third part of the City call'd Scheheryounan, that is to say, the City of Greeks, because it was built by the Command of Alexander the Great; Yon in antient Greek signifying Greece. But it was not in this Quarter of it that Derbende was best peopled, nor in the higher Parts which were on the side of the Mountain towards the top, altho it was much more peopled than Scheheryounan. The greatest number of Inhabitants were in a Place call'd the Moyenne, a City at the foot of the Mountain. These three Parts which compos'd the City, were near three quarters of a League in length, tho they were not very broad. It was a Place of no great Trade, by reason of the proud and untractable Humour of the Inhabitants.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

The Persians say, that Derbende having been once ruin'd, the Great Cosroes caused it to be rebuilt, in the Reign of Justinian the Emperor of Constantinople. There was also a kind of Port where Boats and Vessels daily arrived, and which was shut in by a Chain fasten'd to two Forts, which hinder'd any from entering into the Place by Sea without leave. All this at present is defended by a Castle which is on the top of the Mountain; and the Orientals say, That since Alexander led his Army by the way of Derbende, none can remember that any other but Genghizcan's pass'd that way.

When Hubbe and Suida were got beyond Derbende, they found themselves in the Country of the Alani, who, according to Strabo's Report, could speak twenty five Languages. This Country is the antient Albania, situate between the Caspian Sea and Iberia, in 37 Degrees of Latitude. These People, who are at present call'd call'd the Tartars of Dagueſtan, were extremely ſurpriz'd to ſee on a ſudden theſe two Generals appear, of whom they had not ſo much as heard any mention: And fearing they had ſome deſign upon their Liberties, they at firſt did them all the Miſchief, and put them to all the Trouble imaginable. They cut down the Woods to ſtop up the Lanes, broke up the Roads, and ſpoil'd all the Corn and Proviſions, to cauſe the Moguls to periſh: yet all this did not hinder Tarcou, the chief of their Cities, from being taken and ruin'd. The Circaſſians having join'd the Alani, they much embaraſs'd Suida and Hubbe, till ſuch time as theſe two Generals having found the way to ſurprize Terqui, the Capital of Circaſſia, conquer'd both, notwithſtanding the Succours theſe People receiv'd from the Calmuck Tartars bordering on the Volga and Caſpian Sea, whom they deſired to enter into a League with them.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

The Mogul Generals foreſeeing, that if theſe other Tartars join'd in the League with the Alani and Circaſſians, and that if theſe Nations rais'd all the Forces they could againſt them, they could not withſtand them, wholly apply'd themſelves to break this Confederacy; to effect which, they ſent Meſſengers to the Calmucks, to repreſent to them that they were Tartars as well as they, and all of the ſame Nation; whereas the Alani and Circaſſians were their profeſt Enemies; and that they ask'd nothing but to return to their own Country, and deſired them to be the Arbitrators of this War. The Moguls Reaſons, attended with ſeveral Preſents for the Heads of the Calmuck Hords, who were not willing to provoke them farther, made them change their Minds, and recall their Troops; ſo that the Alani and Circaſſians ſeeing themſelves depriv'd of their Aſſiſtance, Assistance, soon lost all Courage, and gave way to their Enemies. An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

Whilst these two Mogul Generals held Correspondence with the Calmuck Tartars, they pass'd the Volga with ease, and enter'd into Capschac: but it being late in the Year before they arriv'd, they were obliged to pass the Winter there, which very much displeas'd their Hosts; and their long continuance there having in the end given birth to several Feuds, their Friendship ended. Nevertheless, the Moguls having fortify'd themselves in the Country, and learnt that they might be reliev'd by Touschican, who was near; they sent an Express to him, to inform him of the Condition they were in.

This Prince immediately sent away the best part of his Troops to them, led by such skilful Commanders, that they found means to join these two Generals, notwithstanding all the Efforts of their Enemies to hinder them. And all these Troops thus join'd, made a considerable Army, who without much trouble constrain'd these People to acknowledge Genghizcan for their Emperor, as well as the major part of the other Tartars who acknowledg'd him. Touschican being obliged to go to Court, sent Advice of his Departure to Hubbe and Suida, whom he left Masters of Capschac in his Absence, with Order to attack the Nogays, who had offended him.

The Winter having frozen the Rivers, gave the Moguls an easy Passage over Places, which would have otherwise much embaras'd them. By this means they went as far as Astracan, which they subdued: And this War, which lasted six or seven Months, was not finish'd till such such time as the Nogays had acknowledg'd Touſchi for their Sovereign, and Genghizcan for their Grand Can. Hubbe and Suida remain'd in this Country till the Autumn of the Year following, 1224; and then Touſchi being return'd from Court, and from the Diet which was held at Toncat, they left it with the Troops they had brought with them, before thoſe this Prince ſent them, had join'd them.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

The City of Aſtracan, which the Mahometans call'd Hadgi Tarcan, is in the Iſle of Elgoi, which ſeparates Europe from Aſia, and makes part of the Countries of the Tartars of Nogay. It is ſituate in 46 Degrees 22 Minutes of Latitude, about fifty Leagues from the Caſpian Sea, into which ſeveral Rivers diſcharge themſelves. Its Walls, inſtead of Baſtions, have Towers of Stone; and are furniſh'd with ſeveral Pieces of Braſs Cannon. The Gariſon of the City is always a ſtrong one. The Trade is carry'd on with the Nogays by the Calmucks and other Tartars; as alſo by the Muſcovites, Perſians and Armenians. Its principal Traffick is in Silks and Brandy. The Czar of Muſcovy raiſes a great Revenue by the Taxes he lays upon them.

CHAP.

An. Dom. 1223. Heg. 620. Mog. The Monkey.

CHAP. X.

Genghizcan's Departure from Sogdiana for the Diet at Toncat. The Arrival of the Princes his Sons at this Diet.

WHEN the Mogul Emperor had resolved on his Departure from Sogdiana to go to the Diet which he had called together at Toncat, he freed the People of this Province for several Years from the Payment of the usual Tribute, because he was well pleased with their Deportment to him. And to give the Lords of this Country some particular Marks of his Affection, he remitted to them during their whole Lives the Taxes which the Nobility of each Kingdom were obliged to pay to their Prince. This Proceeding of the Emperor caused much Joy to the Inhabitants of Samarcand. But the Joy was not so universal in the City, it being damp'd with seeing the Queen Turcan-Catun, who had been brought thither a Prisoner with her Court, and all the great Officers of the Empire that had been taken, led as in Triumph before the Grand Can's Army, who was going to pass thro those Countries where she was still beloved. Her Haram, or the Ladies of her Seraglio, follow'd her. The great Officers belonging once to Sultan Mehemed marched after. Then the Throne and Crown which he had taken from the Sultan, and his Mother, were borne in State. In this manner Genghizcan marched out of Sogdiana, after having lived there near a Year, and went to the River Jaxartes which he croſs'd over.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

He arrived at Toncat the beginning of the Year of our Lord 1224. and of the Hegira 621. He had made choice of this City to hold the Diet in, both becauſe of its agreeable Situation, and by reaſon it was able to furniſh in a ſufficient manner Proviſions and all other things needful for ſo numerous an Aſſembly. The Princes Octai and Zagatai repair'd to Court as ſoon as it was poſſible for them, after having diſtributed into different Places the Armies they commanded. The two Bodies of Forces under Zagatai were rejoin'd in Tocareſtan; but having ruined the Countries of Talcan and Bamian, he was obliged to return up to the Oxus to ſubſiſt them, and did not croſs over it till he came to Bedacſchan. From thence he continued his way Eaſtward by the Confines of Turqueſtan, and went as far as Otrar, where he fix'd the Head Quarters for his Army, whom he cauſed to encamp in the Turks Country.

Octai uſed the ſame diligence; for when he had finiſhed the Conqueſt of Gazna, and the Troops of the other Generals, with thoſe who were not deſign'd for Perſia, had join'd his Army, he went back up the Country as far as Bocara, from whence he went to Samarcand, becauſe he had Orders to leave his Troops in Sogdiana, quartering along the Territory of Samarcand as far as the Jaxartes.

Touſchican repaired alſo to Court, as has been already ſaid. It had been a long time ſince he had ſeen the Emperor his Father; for immediately after the Reduction of Carizme he had been ſent into Capſchac, where in ſpite of all the Troops of Hords and their Cans joined in league league against him, in less than four Years time he made himself Master of these great Provinces, except that part which was situate in the South, from Nogai to the Caspian Sea, which Hubbe and Suida reduced in their return home by the Country of the Alani: In fine, Touschi had push'd his Conquests as far as the Frontiers of Muscovy. An. Domi. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

When this Prince came into the Grand Can's Presence, he kneel'd down, and the Emperor gave him his Hand to kiss. The Princes his Brothers had the same Honour at their Arrival before him, after having laid their Presents at the foot of the Imperial Throne, according to the usual Custom: but altho their Presents were very considerable, Touschican's surpass'd them all by much; for besides several rare things, he presented a hundred thousand Horses, amongst which there were twenty thousand all Bay-colour'd [1]. After the Emperor had embraced his Sons, and testify'd by his Caresses how well satisfy'd he was with their Conduct, he open'd his Treasures, and loaded them with Gifts. After which he order'd a great Feast to be made, and gave publick Banquets for a whole Month. But the most sumptuous Treat was on their return from a general Hunting, in which there had been kill'd several thousand Beasts of all kinds, of which the best were made use of, and dress'd after the Tartars Fashion. The Grand Can's Faulconers furnished also abundance of all sorts of Birds. They drank not only the usual Drink among the Moguls and Tartars, and Sherbets, the way of making which they had learn'd from the Persians, but also exquisite fine Wines which the Emperor had cauſed to be brought from the Southern Countries, which he prefer'd before the Tartarian Balpiringe, Griut, Beer, or Cammez. Yet they beſides theſe, conſumed a prodigious quantity of Balpiringe, which was a kind of Hydromel, or Metheglin, made of Honey, Rice, and Millet, which they clarify'd ſo well that nothing could look of a finer Colour. They generally drank a great deal of this Liquor, becauſe of its pleaſant Taſte; but it made them drunk as ſoon as Wine, being as ſtrong.

[1] A Bay-colour'd Horse is a reddish brown.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

This Feaſt was made in the Winter when little Cammez was uſed, and was now drank no where but at the Tables of great Lords, where the Butlers, to ſhew their Skill, ſerved up a Drink which was as hard to make good in this Seaſon as it was eaſy to make pleaſant in Summer. [a] They made this Cammez of Mares Milk, which is very ſweet. They poured it into a great Churn, where they churn'd it extraordinary well, in the ſame manner as they make Butter. But this Mares Milk muſt be well beat, if one would make good Cammez; for which reaſon this Work is always reſerved for Men to do, and the Women do not meddle with it. Neither do they milk the Mares, who are generally very troubleſom, becauſe they will not ſtand ſtill to be milk'd, at leaſt if their Foals be not held near them, which are not eaſily governed. When the Butter is made, they take it out of the Churn, and the Butter-milk is the Cammez; but it is different from our Butter-milk, becauſe it is ſharp on the Tongue like the beſt Wine, and as pleaſant. This

[a] The Way to make Cammez.

Drink is of a greyiſh Colour; but the Grand Can's Officers of his Table know how to give it a more agreeable Colour, and to render it ſtill more pleaſant: for by much churning this Liquor they make another, which is called Caracammez, that is, black Cammez, which they reſerve for their Maſter's drinking only. Thoſe who have drank of it affirm that the other Cammez is not ſo pleaſant; which is not to be wonder'd at, becauſe they draw out the pureſt Part of it, which ſwims on the top, and the groſſer Part remains at the bottom, and is reſerved for other Uſes. But let this be as it will, the Authors who make mention of it, aſſure us it is a very wholeſom Drink, and attribute great Vertues to it. The Beer made of Rice and Griut, which is the common Drink in Winter, was plentifully diſtributed among the Domeſticks at the Feaſt. This Griut is very pleaſant, tho a little ſour. It is, by means of a Curd made of Goats Milk, render'd very hard and dry, which they keep for the Winter; and never ſpoils, becauſe they make it extreme hard after the Butter is taken out: and this Drink is afterwards made by ſteeping this Curd in Water.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

CHAP. XI.

The General Diet held in the City of Toncat.

THE Feaſt being ended, the Grand Can cauſed all things to be got ready for holding the Aſſembly he had conven'd, and had ſo well concerted his Meaſures, that all the Members of this great Council appear'd in Toncat at the Day aſſigned them. The Can of the Yugures, whom he had heretofore adopted, had been ſummon'd to take his Place as his adopted Son; and ſeveral other Sovereign Princes, who had voluntarily ſubmitted to Genghizcan, or were in Alliance with him, fail'd not to come thither. Beſides theſe, the Governours of the Provinces of Catai, Mogoliſtan, Caracatai, Iran, and Touran, were alſo there, and ſet up their Tents in the Plain of Toncat.

Altho this Plain was ſeven Leagues long, yet it could hardly contain the Tents and Attendants of all theſe great Perſons who were to be preſent at this Aſſembly: The greateſt part of them had cauſed their moveable Houſes to be drawn thither, and every Lord had a numerous Retinue. Theſe Houſes were built upon Wheels, which carried very long Pieces of Wood faſten'd to their Axeltrees, on which all the Machine was reſted; and the Axeltrees bearing all the Weight, they made them of the hardeſt Wood they could get. Theſe Houſes Houſes reſembled our Tents in Europe, the Floor was of Wood, the four ſides were enclоſed with Cane-work or Laths. The Roof was raiſed in the Faſhion of a Dome, and on the top there was a round Hole which ſerved both for a Window and Chimney; but if the Houſe was large, they uſed ſome other Opening lower, to render the Place more light. Some were cover'd with Felt rubb'd with Sheep's Milk, ſo that the Rain might run off without penetrating it. But that was practiſed only by poor People; for the Rich cauſed the Felt to be plaiſter'd over with a Compoſition in which was a great deal of Tallow, which was leſs eaſy to be penetrated by the Rain. There are ſome curious People, who, to be diſtinguiſhed from the reſt, cauſed their Houſes to be cover'd with Stuffs of various Colours. An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

They make theſe Houſes larger or ſmaller as they pleaſe, but they are always longer than broad; and however light the Wood is they are made of, they are ſometimes ſo heavy, by reaſon of the Furniture they contain, that they are obliged to put to one of them thirty Oxen to draw it along. There are ſome that are made to take to pieces, and ſet together at pleaſure; and others that always remain fix'd on their Wheels, which are thoſe that can be drawn by two or three Oxen, which generally ſerve for Store-houſes to put up the beſt of the Furniture, and Clothes. And the great Lords having abundance of theſe little Houſes, cauſed them to be placed round about their principal Lodging; ſo that the dwelling Place of every Nobleman thus diſpoſed appears a Camp. And we muſt obſerve, that the Door of every Houſe is always turned to the South.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

The Oxen which draw these Houses are the finest Ornament of the Moguls and Tartars Equipages, because they all strive to have fine ones. There are Oxen so dear, that they cannot be purchased but by very rich People. Those that are most esteem'd come from the Country of Tangut: These are extremely strong, and there are some of them have Hair like Horses; and the most part have that on their Tails white, and as soft as Silk. They make use of Camels in some Places; but the use of Oxen is much more common.

When they had marked out the King's Quarters in the Plain, which took up near two Leagues in Compass, and the Streets, publick Places, Bazars or Markets were appointed, they pitched the Tents for the Emperor's Household. That which was made for the Diet to sit in, would contain at least two thousand Persons; and to distinguish it from the rest, it was cover'd with White. They erected a magnificent Throne for Genghizcan, and forgot not to place on an Eminence the black Felt-Carpet on which this Prince was seated when he was proclaimed Grand Can. And this Emblem of the poor Estate of the Moguls at that time was always held in great Veneration by them, so long as their Empire lasted. The Tent for the Diet had but two great Entrances, the one they named the Imperial Gate, the other the Publick. All the Members of the Assembly were not allow'd to enter or go forth but by the common Gate, altho they both stood open. The Imperial one was reserved for the Emperor only to come in at; and the People respected it in such a manner, that no Man, of what Quality soever, did once approach it, tho there was no Guard placed to keep them out. The Guards which were at the common Door, served only for a shew of Grandure; for the Orders given were so exactly observed by every body, that no Disorder ever happen'd amongst them. An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

Guards

Altho the Luxury of the Princes and chief Mogul Lords was not yet come to the height it arrived at after Genghizcan's Death, yet there appear'd a great deal of Magnificence in their Habits and Equipages. On the greatest part of the Tents there were placed Streamers of divers Colours, made of the richest Silks; nothing could be a finer Sight. The Princes and Lord's Horses had Saddles and Furniture set with precious Stones and Gold, which seem'd to vie with each other. The Habits the Moguls wore, were like those the Turks and Ottomans wear at this present time. Those of the great Lords were made of Gold and Silver Stuffs, and rich Silks, which they had brought from the Countries they had conquer'd; and it being still very cold Weather, they wore under their Robes a certain kind of fine Fur Garment, called Sables, that is brought from Russia and Siberia, which they wore next their Skins. They wore, when abroad in the Field, over their Habits, to preserve them, great Coats of Wolves Skins. Their Attendants had for the most part Coats made of Felt of divers Colours, lined with Wadding. The Habits of the Moguls.

Altho this Assembly was called together to settle the Affairs of the Empire, yet there needed not much time to do it: for notwithstanding the great Conquests and vast number of People subdued, Zagatai, the Keeper of Genghizcan's Laws, had put them in so good a Method, that all things which were proposed to

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

to be regulated, were immediately refer'd to these Laws, and by them determined without Trouble, so that nothing more was requisite than to ratify them, which extremely rejoiced the Legislator. Genghizcan, as has been before observed, much delighting to speak in publick, failed not before the Assembly broke up to make an Oration in praise of his Laws, and at the same time of himself. He recommended the exact Observation of them to all the People, and shew'd how advantageous and useful they were, since by their means so many important Affairs had been regulated in so short a time. He likewise said that the Observation of these very Laws had been the Cause of all his Conquests, and of the Honour the Moguls now shared with him. From hence he took occasion to recount his Victories, naming every Sovereign Prince he had conquer'd, not excepting even the Prince of Tancut, there present. If it may be forgiven a great Prince to praise himself, Genghizcan merits to be excused, considering he was possess'd of all Tartary, from the East as far as Muscovy, and from the uninhabitable Parts of the North as far as Transoxiana, and of the vast Country of Turqueſtan as far as China and India; nay, even of the half of China itself, which was subject to him, and which Prince Utakin his Brother had govern'd with such Prudence during his Absence, that at his return he found it quiet, notwithstanding the several Attempts the King of Mangi, which is the Southern China, had made to excite them by his Emissaries to a Revolt. All the Countries between Turqueſtan, the Caspian Sea, and the Rivers Oxus and Jaxartes, were entirely subdued; as also the People of Sende beyond the Indus as far as the Persian Sea,

The Extent of the Countries subdued by Genghizcan.

Co-

Coraſſana, Mazendran, and other Parts of the great Empire of Perſia, all acknowledged Genghizcan for their Sovereign, excepting the little Country of Fars, the Conqueſt of which he had been obliged to leave to his Lieutenants. An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

He was not content to relate the Number and Names of the Countries he had conquer'd, but order'd, as the moſt effectual means to convince the Diet of his Greatneſs, that all the Ambaſſadors ſhould be call'd into the Aſſembly who had follow'd the Court, and who were at this time in their Tents, which were pitched round the Imperial Tent, as alſo all the Envoys and Deputies ſent from the Kingdoms and Countries he had ſubdued. They all went to the foot of the Throne, and there he gave them Audience. After which he diſmiſs'd the Aſſembly, and every one retired to his Home.

Touſchi, who look'd on Capſchac as his own Kingdom, ſoon after took leave of the Emperor, who confirmed to him his Grant of the Sovereign Authority over it, and gave him leave to take under his Command the Troops which now were with Hubbe and Suida, the better to ſupport his Dignity, and ſubdue the neighbouring Princes who ſhould go about to moleſt him.

Prince Touſchi was no ſooner arrived in Capſchac, but the two Generals put their Troops into his hands, and returned to the Grand Can, whom they found ſtill at Toncat. He gave them a good Reception, accepted their Preſents, and cauſed rich Veſts to be given them. He went from Toncat ſoon after, attended with them and all his Court, making always the Captive Queen to follow him, mounted on a Chariot, and loaded with Irons, to ſhew to the Eyes of the Nations a proud Monument of his Victories.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

ries. When he was on his March, he gave an hour's Converſation every day to Hubbe and Suida, to relate to him their Expeditions, and the Rarities they had come to the knowledge of in the ſtrange Countries they had been in, which they entertained him with; ſo that they had ſtill ſomething new to ſatisfy the Emperor's Curioſity till he arrived in Mogoliſtan.

CHAP. XII.

Genghizcan's Return to Caracorom, the Seat of his Empire. The Moguls Marriages. The Beginning of the War of Tangut.

THE Grand Can paſt by the way of Turqueſtan, from whence he croſs'd over the Kingdom of the Naimans, and enter'd into Caracatai, and ſome Months after went to Caracorom, the Seat of his Empire. This City, which was no leſs than twelve days Journey diſtant from the Place where this Prince was born in the Country of the Yeca Moguls, was really a very inconſiderable Place when it was taken from Ounghcan; but Genghizcan had much improved and imbelliſhed it ſince, and after him, Octai-Caan cauſed it to be rebuilt, and it became a very famous and populous City.

The Eaſtern Hiſtorians do not mention how Genghizcan was received by the Inhabitants of his Capital City, nor what became of the unfortunate Queen Turcan-Catun, nor of the Carizmean rizmean Lords who bore her Company; but it is to be ſuppoſed that theſe illuſtrious Captives finiſh'd their Lives in Miſery and Obſcurity. The firſt Pleaſure the Emperor taſted at Caracorom was the Sight of ſome of his Grandſons, whom he had not ſeen for ſeven Years. Amongſt theſe there were two of whom he had conceived great Hopes, which they did not fail to anſwer. They were called Cublay and Hulacou. The firſt was then about ten Years old, and the other nine. They continually employ'd themſelves in Hunting, which among the Moguls was accounted a great Sign of Fire and Courage in thoſe that were naturally addicted to this bold Exerciſe. The Inclination they ſhew'd for this Sport ſo extremely pleaſed the Grand Can, that he gave them Employments near him, and took the Trouble to inſtruct them himſelf.

An. Dom. 1224, Heg. 621, Mog. The Hen.

And now this Prince being recover'd of his Fatigues, applied himſelf to ſettle the State. He firſt cauſed the great Officers in China to be called to Court, to give him an account of their Behaviour; and his Brother Utakin having fully informed him of their Actions, ſome were puniſhed, and others rewarded. He did the ſame by the great Lords of Mogoliſtan and Caracatay. He ſent alſo for Schidaſcou the Sovereign of Tangut, who had offer'd to continue to be tributary to him. But this Prince fearing he would not pardon him his former Rebellion, took no care to obey his Orders, but rather thought of making a League with the Chineſe of Mangi, and the Oriental Turks his Neighbours. However, to gain time, he uſed ſeveral Pretences to excuſe himſelf to the Emperor, whoſe Troops not being all arrived, he diſſembled his Anger till ſuch time as he was in a condition to make him feel his Resentments.

in

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

Mean while Schidaſcou found the Chineſe and Turks diſpoſed to ſecond him. The Chineſe complain'd of Genghizcan's uſurping the Country of Catai, and the Turks of the vile Uſage he gave Queen Turcan-Catun, who had always uſed them well when they were her Subjects. Nevertheleſs, the Difficulty of forming Leagues where the Intereſts are different amongſt thoſe who compoſe it, did not permit them to come to a concluſion before the Grand Can was able to begin a War againſt them. Schidaſcou had already levied a great many Troops, and prepared to receive the Moguls.

During this time the Emperor's Army arrived near Caracorom very much fatigued. This Prince ſuffer'd them to reſt for ſome Weeks; but it was not his Cuſtom to let them be long idle. He cauſed the uſual Hunting to be proclaimed, and all the Troops were obliged to be preſent at it, altho the Winter was very ſevere. The Hunting was not quite ended, when News came that Schidaſcou had ſo well beſtirr'd himſelf to get a conſiderable Army together, that he had at laſt accompliſh'd it. This Report being confirmed by ſeveral Couriers who were ſent to the Grand Can by his Correſpondents, he reſolved to ſend ſome Troops towards Tangut to obſerve his Enemy. And the Winter being yet very cold, he order'd the Captains to give their Soldiers Coats lined with Sheep-Skins. They alſo cover'd the Horſes with Felt, and put them in a condition to ſupport the Rigour of the Seaſon.

The Care of providing for this War did not hinder the Diverſions in the Court and City, where there were great Rejoicings. An infinite number of Marriages were celebrated at Caracorom, and in Mogoliſtan. The Emperor himſelf married the Princeſſes his Son's Daughters to Princes of his own Blood; and their Marriages were kept with publick Feaſts, ſuitable to the Quality of their Husbands. The Treats, and Horſe-Races after the Cuſtom of the Moguls, a long time diverted the Court; and the Soldiers being loaden with rich plunder, ſeveral bought the handſomeſt Maids they could light of, and married them. Which was much practiſed amongſt the Moguls and Tartars, their Laws permitting them ſo to do, provided thoſe they married were neither their Siſters nor Aunts. A Man might marry two own Siſters, nay, even his Father's Wives after his Deceaſe, only her excepted of whom he was the Son. An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen. The Mogul Marriages.

nite

They did not obſerve any great Ceremonies in their Marriages. They contented themſelves with the mutual Conſent of both Parties, managed by the Fathers and Mothers. The Marriage being concluded on, the Father of the Maid received from the Bridegroom the Sum of Money agreed upon; after which he gave a great Banquet to all his Son-in-Law's Relations, both Men and Women, at which his own likewiſe did not fail to be preſent. In the midſt of this Feaſt, the Bride got away, and went to hide herſelf with ſome Female Relations; and when her Companions who were before acquainted with, and had contrived the Place of her Retreat, ſaw the Bridegroom perplex'd to find her, they were extremely diverted, and nothing could more torment him than their Laughter: but when he was ſo lucky as to find her, he immediately carried her home with him to his Houſe, to which all the Relations and Friends accompanied them, and then taking taking leave, left them to themselves. The next day after the Marriage, the Bride had her Hair cut off from the Top of her Head to her Forehead, and dreſſed herſelf in a large Garment or Veſt which reached down to her Heels. This Veſt is open before, and faſten'd or tied together on the right ſide. After this ſhe put on her Head a Cap ſow'd to a little light Hoop, which makes the Faſhion of it round, and is tied on under her Chin with a Ribband. This ſort of Cap or Turbant is generally two or three Hands high; but thoſe which Women wear who would appear above the Vulgar, are ſometimes an Ell high. It is ſquare at top, cover'd with a rich Stuff, and adorned with Plumes and Jewels, which give them a great Luſtre when they are on horſeback; and theſe Caps being hollow within, they put their Hair into them. The young People make Compliments to the married Couple during eight days, bringing Preſents, which the Husband receives, without being obliged to make any Returns, or even to treat them; but the eight days being expired, he muſt treat all his and her Relations and Friends: and theſe Feaſts ſeldom end without ſome Quarrel, becauſe they are too profuſe of their Liquors.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

But to return to our Hiſtory: So ſoon as the Emperor's Troops arrived in the Country of Tangut, the Mogul Captains ſtopp'd ſhort to conceal and ſecure themſelves and Soldiers from being ſurprized by Schidaſcou. This Prince believed they would not begin to march towards him till the Spring, and was therefore much ſurprized to hear of their Approach, and even ſtartled, altho they were ſtill a great diſtance from him; for they ſtopp'd near a City named

Ezine

Ezine or Azine, which was to the South of Caracorom, and that was twelve days hard Journey from Campion, where Schidaſcou kept his Court. An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

The Moguls made great havock in his Country before he could ſend Troops enough to oppoſe them. They had even time to get together as much Forage and Proviſions of Cattle and Corn in this Country, as would ſuffice not only to ſubſiſt them, but alſo to ſerve the other Troops that were on their march to come and join them.

The City of Campion was ſurrounded with ſtrong Walls, Towers, and Ditches. The Caravans of the Muſcovite, Tartar, Perſian and Armenian Merchants, always ſtopp'd at this Place when they came to trade with China. And as none but the Ambaſſadors of Sovereign Princes were permitted to paſs farther, all the Trade muſt of neceſſity be carried on in this City for the Merchandize they traffick'd with the Chineſe for, who brought thither all the fineſt Commodities the neighbouring Provinces produced, as Linen Cloths, and other Stuffs made of Cotton, Gold and Silver Silks, and China Ware; which render'd Campion a very rich Place. There were in this Country likewiſe many good Towns; and among the reſt, Sachion, which was a very large Town, but not a Place of much Trade. It was inhabited by Neſtorian Chriſtians, Mahometans, and many Pagans, who had each their Temples and free Exerciſe of their Religions. They were a People curious of knowing Secrets, and particularly applied themſelves to the Symia, which teaches to make things appear which were not in being, and thoſe diſappear which were preſent. Their Skill in this Science occaſion'd casion'd these People to pass for Magicians or Conjurers amongst the Turks and Tartars.

An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

Succuir is still dependent on Tangut. It has its Cities, and its Capital is called also Succuir, in which all the Houses are built of Brick, and the Inhabitants are of the same Sects as those of Sachion. The Mountains adjacent do produce the best Rhubarb of any Place in all the Country of Tangut. They dig it up in the Winter, because in Summer the Root is full of Holes, and hollow like a Spunge, if gather'd in that Season. There are in this Province almost all sorts of Fruits that grow in Europe, except Grapes. The People are well-bred, and the Men are not debauched, as at Camul, a City near it. They believe in Tangut that it is a Sin for a Man to endeavour to seduce a Wife or a Maid; but at the same time they think it no Crime to lie with a Woman, if she makes the Offer. The Men are little of Stature, have black Hair; their Noses are short and small, and they have little Hair on their Chins. They generally have as many Wives as they are able to maintain. The Women and Men both wear black Caps made pecked at the top like a Sugar-Loaf. Their Money is little Bits of Silver without any Stamp on it, with which they buy what they want, and is valued by its Weight. 'Tis out of this Country that the fine wild Oxen come, of which mention is made before. There are also very large Elephants and beautiful Cows; and 'tis a thing worthy Observation, that these Cows will not suffer the Bull to come near them, unless they hear some body sing to excite them to it.

The Tartars of Tangut make use of Astrologers in almost all their Affairs, and they will not undertake any Buſineſs without firſt con- An. Dom. 1224. Heg. 621. Mog. The Hen.

ſulting one who obſerves the Stars, and points out a lucky Moment to begin it. They even conſult the Aſtrologers about burying their Dead, who are not inter'd till after very exact Obſervations made. And to prevent a dead Corps infecting the Houſe if it be kept long unburied, they put it into a Coffin made of very thick hard Wood, and ſtop all the Crevices with Pitch, after having put into it Camphire and other Perfumes; and then cover it with ſome rich Pall. But becauſe they ſerve their Dead with the ſame Meats they uſed whilſt living, they uncover the Coffin, near which they ſet the Meats, and leave it ſo long a time as the Deceaſed uſed generally to ſit at Dinner, being perſuaded that his Spirit is preſent, and ſees all that is done in the Houſe, and that he feeds on the Scent of the Meats. When the Aſtrologer thinks it a proper time to bury the dead Perſon, he muſt ſtill make farther Obſervations to know whether they muſt carry the Body out by the Door of the Houſe as uſual, or make another; for if they omit exactly to follow all his Directions, they fail not to impute to this In-obſervation all the Misfortunes that befal the Family. After all theſe Ceremonies they carry the Body out of the City to burn it. It is follow'd by his Relations and Friends, but ſeveral times ſet down by the way in Huts built on purpoſe, in every one of which they find a Table ſpread, and Meats upon it for him.

Their Funerals.

Rubruquis.

Marco-polo.

Carpin.

An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

CHAP. XIII.

Genghizcan's March to Tangut. The laſt Actions of the Sultan Gelaleddin at his Return from India. The Battel fought with Schidaſcou the Sovereign of Tangut.

THE main part of Genghizcan's Army were not in a condition to march and join the Troops at Tangut till about the Month of June in the Year 1225. Heg. 622. and then they were obliged to provide againſt the Seaſon, becauſe the warm Weather did not uſually begin in Tangut till about the end of that Month, and the Country could not furniſh but very few Neceſſaries before that time.

Fadlallah, p. 431.

This Emperor would always ſhare the Fatigues and Hardſhips of War with his Soldiers. He made a review of his Troops; after which he order'd a hundred thouſand Men for China, where he fear'd a Revolt, if Fortune favour'd Schidaſcou: then with three hundred and fifty thouſand which remain'd, including thoſe that were already gone to Tangut, he began his March. He divided his Army into ten Bodies, to each of which he aſſign'd a particular General. The Princes Zagatai and Octai commanded the two firſt; the others were under the Command of Caraſchar, Ilencou, Bela, Hubbe, Suida, and other Lords who had ſignalized themſelves in the paſt Wars. But all theſe Generals were ſubject to Prince Tuli.

Be-

Besides these, he had a flying Camp of broken Officers for the Instruction of his Grandsons Cublay and Hulacou, who in the end became very great Men. An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

After several Weeks March from the Country of Mogoliſtan, the Army croſs'd a Desart which was forty days Journey over, in the Province that lay moſt Eaſtward of the Naimans; and when he was arrived on the Frontiers of Tangut, which was alſo called Cachin, the Emperor made his Coming known to Schidaſcou by taking of the City of Ezine, which his Troops that were before arrived had render'd unable to hold out long againſt him. The ſudden Reduction of this City gave leave to his Troops to repoſe and refreſh themſelves after the long March they had undergone. Genghizcan not being willing to do any thing raſhly, or run great hazards, choſe this Place for his Reſidence during his Stay in Tangut; and acted ſo wiſely, that ſome of the People of the Country, gain'd by his Preſents to them, ſerved as Spies for him, and gave him an account of the Strength and Diſpoſition of his Enemies, informing him that Schidaſcou had ſent out thirty thouſand Horſe, in ſeveral Parties, to endeavour to ſurprize him. And in reality theſe Troops, which were compoſed of ſelect Men, ſoon appear'd on the Frontiers of the Country of Ezine, and at firſt defeated ſome Parties of Moguls whom they met with, but ſoon retired on the Advice given them that the Grand Can was marching with all his Army againſt Schidaſcou, who had got together an Army of five hundred thouſand Men, the greateſt part of whom were furniſhed him by the Chineſe of Mangi.

An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

Fadlallah, p. 431.

Genghizcan, tho his Forces were much inferior in number, yet never was ſhock'd; but flatter'd himſelf that his Enemies Troops were unskilful in War, and undiſciplined; whereas his were, on the contrary, inured to fighting, and uſed to conquer, and therefore would certainly gain the Victory. He went forward therefore in ſearch of Schidaſcou. Zagatai and Caraſchar Nevian had forty thouſand Men under their Command; Hubbe and Suida had thirty thouſand; Ilencou commanded twenty thouſand Carizmeans, who had in ſeveral Countries been on the Moguls ſide: a like number of Indians obey'd the Commands of Bela; and Bedreddin, who had ſerv'd the Grand Can againſt Mehemed, becauſe that Sultan had put his Uncle to death, brought thirty thouſand Men from the Country of the Getes, and the Frontiers of Capſchac. A Can named Daniſchmende, a Favourite of the Emperor, had under his Command thirty thouſand Carizmeans, new-rais'd Troops. The Can of the Yugures led the Prince's Auxiliary Troops, who had after his Example voluntarily ſubmitted to Genghizcan. And all theſe Generals had as many Lieutenants under them, as they had ten thouſands of Men. The old veteran Bands were commanded by the Prince Octai, and made the Body of Reſerve which attended the Emperor's Perſon; and in this Body was the flying Camp of Reformed Officers.

Altho all theſe Officers and Troops were very rich, they were all plainly dreſt, becauſe the Grand Can would have them ſo. The Enemy, on the contrary, were dreſt in Cloth of Gold and Silver, and Silks brought from China; and the very common Soldiers had Habits much finer than the Mogul Officers.

Schidaſcou

Schidaſcou having learnt that Genghizcan was but two Days March from him, ſent a hundred thouſand Horſe, detach'd out of all the Squadrons in his Army, to go and ſurprize his Van-guard. They attack'd them with much Vigour, but found them ſo firm, that they could not ſo much as put one Rank into Diſorder, whatever Efforts they made. The Night coming on, caus'd the Fight to ceaſe; and Schidaſcou's Troops retired with loſs, and return'd to the main Army, which they met within a Day's Journey of the Place where they had fought. In the mean time Genghizcan ſtill march'd forward; and at laſt the two Armies came in ſight of one another. An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

Schidaſcou's Army took up a great ſpace of Ground; but the Moguls were obliged to fight upon the Ice on a Lake, the Waters of which were furniſh'd by a Canal from the River Caramouran, and were at this time frozen. A general Fight began, and the Moguls quickly had the Advantage. The Troops of Tangut, and others on the ſame Line in Front, were intirely routed; and all the Enemy's Army had been ſo at that inſtant, if the Chineſe commanded by Mayancan, whom Genghizcan had caus'd to be ſiezed in the Chineſe War, and the Turks led by the Prince of Jurge, had not ſtrongly withſtood the Moguls Fury: But theſe two Generals charg'd the two Wings of the Grand Can's Army with ſo much Bravery, that it reviv'd the Courage of their Soldiers, and they made a terrible Slaughter, killing above thirty thouſand Men. This good Succeſs became fatal to the victorious Troops, who believing the Moguls vanquiſh'd, charg'd them boldly, without keeping their Ranks; whereas the Moguls, who always kept cloſe and in order, Genghizcan's Battel with Schidaſcou. Fadlallah, p. 432.

An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

ſuffer'd themſelves with much difficulty to be broken. At laſt the reſolute Reſiſtance Marancan and the Prince of Jurge met with in the Center aſtoniſh'd them; and the Corps de Reſerve coming up, and falling upon them all at once, made the Turks and Chineſe give back, and betake themſelves to flight. Schidaſcou himſelf, after having ſhew'd an extraordinary Bravery, was oblig'd to fly, and leave the Field of Battel to the Enemy, who cut in pieces all the Troops that reſiſted. And 'tis ſaid, that there were kill'd in this Battel three hundred thouſand Men, belonging to this Prince and his Allies.

The Mogul Hiſtory makes no mention how many Genghizcan loſt; but it ſpeaks of all thoſe who ſignaliz'd themſelves in this great Action, and ſays, that the young Princes Cublay and Hulacou made appear by their Courage, that they ſhould be able one Day to equal their Grandfather. After this Victory Genghizcan marched againſt the Turks of Jurge, but they ſubmitted; and he was contented with their Submiſſion and their rich Preſents, becauſe he deſign'd the Conqueſt of the Southern China, and would therefore preſerve his Forces for ſo great an Enterprize. However, he impoſed an annual Tribute on theſe Turks, and agreed with their Deputies as to the Gariſons they ſhould admit into their Towns, of his Soldiers; and likewiſe obliged them to furniſh him ſome Troops to join with his own. So he went no farther, but paſt the Winter in the Weſtern part of Tangut; where he receiv'd Letters from Bagdat, which acquainted him with the death of the Califf. On this News he order'd new Levies to be made: and whilſt that was doing, he ſecured himſelf, not only of the Countries dependent on on Tangut, as Ergimul, Sinqui, and Egricaya; but also of the Countries adjacent, and particularly of the City of Sikion, which was distant from Pequin but fourscore Days Journey. It much imported him to have this Place, which might have given him great disquiet when he was enter'd into the Southern China. An. Dom. 1225. Heg. 622. Mog. The Dog.

There needed a Country of such vast extent, and so fertile as Tangut, to subsist so numerous an Army for so long a time: accordingly the Army was maintain'd there without Trouble, and past the Winter in encamping and decamping in the Southern parts of this Kingdom towards Turqueſtan, where there was abundance of fat Pasture Ground. They past the other Seasons in the Northern Quarters of this Country in the Mountains, marching always without stopping in any City, both to prevent their wanting Forage, as also to preserve the Horses from the Flies, and other Insects of that kind, of which there is great quantity in the Southern Countries.

After this good Success, it seem'd that the Mogul Emperor had nothing more to desire: His Empire was at Peace; his Court appear'd all Joy, and nothing was thought on but how to divert him. He said himself, That he wish'd for nothing more than to do good to his Subjects; and that he would wholly apply himself to render them happy, so soon as he had subdued the rest of China, of which the Conquest appear'd to him not difficult. But God had otherwise order'd it; and Fortune, which does not use to continue Men long in the same state, in a short time changed this Prince's Joy into Sorrow: whilst he was diverting himself in the midst of his Family, he was inform'd of the death of Touschican, his eldest Son. This News, which The Death of Touschican in Capschac.

An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

was brought him from Capſchac, afflicted all the Court. The Emperor ſhew'd at firſt much Conſtancy of Mind; but by degrees, inſenſibly, his Conſtraint gave way to his fatherly Affection, and he fell into a deep Melancholy, which from that time hinder'd him from reliſhing any Diverſion.

He even appear'd ſcarcely ſenſible of the News they brought him, of a great Victory gain'd by his Lieutenant over Gelaleddin. This Sultan being inform'd that the Emperor was far off, return'd from India into Mercrane with ſome Troops; from thence he went to Schiraz, afterwards to Iſpahan, into which his Friends introduced him ſecretly, and there he augmented his little Army. From thence he went to Bagdat, and not being well received, he beat the Troops the Califf had ſent againſt him, and retook Tauris. Then he march'd againſt the Georgians with thirty thouſand Men, whom he employ'd, at his return to Azerbijana, againſt a more numerous Army of the Moguls, who paſs'd over the Oxus in the beginning of the Year 1226, Hegira 623, to go to meet him; which Army defeated his, of which Advice was given the Grand Can, as is before mentioned. The Moguls made themſelves Maſters of Tauris after the Sultan's Defeat; who rallying his Forces, haraſs'd his Enemies, and had ſomething the better of them. He laid Siege to Erlat, the capital City of Armenia, where the Califf of Bagdat ſent an Ambaſſador to him with Preſents. From thence he paſs'd into Anatolia, to oblige them to render him the ſame Reſpect they had done his Father; but he was there beaten by Aladdin Keicobad, a Seljukide Prince of the third Branch, and by other Sovereign Princes of that Country who were join'd together; gether; who nevertheleſs did not purſue him after the Battel, becauſe they were willing he ſhould keep the Moguls in play; who yet at laſt ſurpriz'd him, and entirely routed and pillag'd his Camp. He fled to Mahan on the Confines of Azerbijana, where he lived a whole Winter without being known: But being at laſt diſcover'd, he retired into Curdiſtan, where he was kill'd four Years after Genghizcan's Death, by a Native of that Country, in the Houſe of one of his Friends, where he had taken Refuge. An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

The laſt Actions of Gelaleddin at his return from India.

So ſoon as the Spring of the Year 1226 was come, and that the Emperor's Troops were arrived in the Place he had appointed them to meet, to enter into China, and march againſt the People of Maugi; there arrived an Officer from Schidaſcou, whom this Prince ſent to the Grand Can, to intreat him to forget what was paſt, and to accept of his Service. Schidaſcou was reſolved to make this Step, becauſe he fear'd leſt the Moguls ſhould carry his Fort of Arbaca, to which he was retired after his defeat. Fearing this, and hoping to better his Condition by ſubmitting, he condeſcended, notwithſtanding the Ambition and Hatred that continually animated him againſt them. His Envoy was well receiv'd at Genghizcan's Court, who, in an Audience he gave him, told him, 'You may aſſure your Maſter, that I will 'no more think of what is paſt betwixt him 'and me; and that I will grant him my 'Friendſhip.

Soon after the Emperor fell ſick, and his Phyſicians attributed his Illneſs to the badneſs of the Air of the marſhy Countries where he had a long time reſided, and to the Grief the death of his Son Touſchi had occaſion'd him. His Sickneſs having ſeiz'd him near to a Foreſt in in the Road to China, the Generals of the Army were obliged to ſuſpend the March of the Troops, and to take new meaſures for their Subſiſtence. All the Court was encamped near the Foreſt. The Camp, compoſed of a prodigious quantity of Tents and moving Houſes, reſembled a great City. The Quarter where the Grand Can was lodged, was farther off than uſual, and the Chamber where this Prince lay was out of the hearing of the Noiſe and Hurry of the Court. But all theſe Precautions were in vain, he recover'd not his Health: On the contrary, whatever Care the Phyſicians and Aſtrologers took, the Diſeaſe daily increaſed upon him. At laſt, the Emperor, who never flatter'd himſelf in Matters of Importance, judging by the Pains he felt that his Life was in danger, reſolved to diſpoſe of his Dominions, and name a Succeſſor.

An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. the Hog.

CHAP. XIV.

The Advancement of Octai Can to the great Empire of Aſia. The Death of Genghizcan.

THE Grand Can finding himſelf extreme ill, cauſed his Sons and their Children to come together into his Preſence: The other Princes of the Blood alſo came, according to his Orders. He ſet himſelf upright, and notwithſtanding the Pains that racked him, he put on, as much as poſſibly he could, that majeſtick Look which had always to that moment both

both awed and gain'd respect even from his Children and the Sovereigns of the East. He told them that he found his Spirits sunk, and that he must of necessity dispose himself for Death: 'I leave you, added he, the greatest 'Empire in the World. You are the peaceable 'Possessors of it; but if you will preserve it, 'be always united: for if Discord steals in 'amongst you, be assured that you will be all 'ruined.' An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

It is even said, that the better to convince them that their Safety depended on their Union, he gave them a Bundle of Arrows which he had caused to be brought to him, and bid them break them all together; which they not being able to do, he caused the Bundle to be untied, and having made them break the Arrows separately, which they did with ease, he took this Occasion to represent to them the Effects of Union and Discord amongst Princes; and said thus, to conclude, 'Be then but as one Tongue 'and one Soul, and you shall be secured from 'the Effects of all Curses; but if you do not 'observe the Laws I have established, but 'walk in the Paths of Dissension, your Subjects, 'that is to say, your Enemies, shall in short 'time become Masters of your Empire.'

After having finished these Words, he asked of those who stood by, whether they were not of opinion he should make choice of a Prince who was capable to govern so many Kingdoms after him. Then his Sons and Grandsons fell on their knees, and said, 'You are our Father, 'and our Emperor, and we are your Slaves; 'tis for us to bow down our Heads when you 'honour us with your Commands, and to exe-'cute them.' Then they rising from the Ground, he named Prince Octai for his Successor, and and declared him the Can of Cans, by the Title of Caan, which he gave him, and which his Succeſſors have kept. They all bowed the knee a ſecond time, and cried, 'What the 'great Genghizcan ordains is juſt, we will all 'obey him; and if he pleaſes to command us 'even to kiſs the Rod with which we have 'merited to be chaſtiſed, we will do it without diſputing.'

An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

The Emperor gave to Zagatai, Tranſoxiana and ſeveral other Countries, of which he would have a particular Agreement made in Writing; and this Country from this time took the Name of his Sovereign, and was called Oulous-Tchagatay, that is to ſay, the Country of Zagatai. He commanded Caraſchar Nevian, in whom he had an entire Confidence, to accompany this Prince into Tranſoxiana, and to purſue Gelaleddin if this Sultan ventured to ſet foot in it. He made at this time ſome Laws to prevent the Differences that might ariſe between Zagatai and the reſt of his Heirs, and would have them put in writing, that they might remain in full force, to be put in execution in caſe of need. The laſt Order he gave was concerning Schidaſcou, whom he could not pardon his Revolting, notwithſtanding what he had ſaid to his Envoy. And to the end that this Prince might be no Gainer by his Death, if he got knowledge of it before his Arrival, he forbid it ſhould be publiſhed till ſuch time as Schidaſcou, who was hourly expected in the Camp, was arrived; and commanded that they ſhould then ſecure him, and treat him according to the utmoſt Rigour of the Laws. Some few days after this he expired, at the ſame time that thoſe about him reported in the Camp that he was much better than uſual, and that they

ſhould

ſhould quickly ſee him at the Head of the Army. An. Dom. 1226.

The Death of this Prince happen'd a Year or thereabouts after the Coronation of St. Lewis King of France, that is to ſay, towards the end of the Year 1226. Heg. 623. after he had reigned twenty five Years, he being then in the ſeventy third Year of his Age. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

It was no difficult matter to conceal Genghizcan's Death, becauſe amongſt theſe People they knew little of what paſt in the Apartments of a great Perſon who was ſick, and who generally would not be ſeen by any but thoſe who waited on him in his Illneſs. It muſt alſo be obſerved, that when any one was ſick, they put ſome Signal on the top of his Houſe, to give notice that none ſhould viſit him; and thoſe who were Commanders, or Perſons of Diſtinction, had Centinels placed a good way from their Lodgings, to hinder any from approaching the Houſe, but thoſe who were ſent for.

Schidaſcou arrived eight days after Genghizcan's Death in the Camp, which he found in a great deal of Joy on account of the feigned Recovery of their Emperor, whoſe Orders concerning him were exactly executed. They ſeized on the unfortunate Schidaſcou, on his Children and ſome Lords who accompanied him, and put them all to death; and by this bloody Execution, Tangut and the Provinces dependent remain'd annexed to the Empire of the Moguls.

After this the Death of the Grand Can was publiſhed. There was then nothing to be heard in every Place but Shrieks. All the Royal Family were drowned in Tears, the Officers of the Court in a general Conſternation, the the Soldiers overwhelmed with Grief; and all the Officers made the Air eccho with their Lamentations. When all things for the Funeral Pomp were got ready, and the Princes, Generals of the Army, and other martial Officers, were come together, the Drums beat, the Trumpets, Kettledrums, and other warlike Inſtruments, proclaimed the Funeral on all ſides. Then they brought forth the Grand Can's Body with the utmoſt Reſpect and Magnificence, and carried it to the Place he had choſen for his Body to be inter'd in. It was under a Tree of ſingular Beauty, where in his return from the Chace ſome days before he fell ſick, he had reſted himſelf with much Satisfaction. They buried him there with all the pompous Ceremonies of the Mogul Religion, and afterwards erected a moſt noble Monument in this Place upon his Grave.

An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

There is no likelihood that the barbarous Cuſtom, which has ſince been practiſed amongſt the Tartars and Moguls, to kill thoſe they meet in the way, when they are carrying to the Grave the Body of a Grand Can, was at this time obſerved; for the Hiſtorians mention no ſuch thing, and beſides, this Cuſtom is not countenanced by any Law. Yet it is certain they exerciſed this Cruelty at the Funerals of the Emperors who have ſucceeded Genghiz-can. The Gentlemen who accompany the Funeral Pomp, perſuaded that the Men they kill are predeſtinated to die then, put to death thoſe they meet in the way, and even cut the Throats of the fineſt Horſes.

The People who came to viſit the Tomb, planted other Trees round it, which ſo artfully cover'd it, and in ſuch beautiful Order, as render'd it in time one of the fineſt Monuments in the World. So great a Mourning and Loſs could not continue long a Secret, or be confined to Tangut alone. It was ſpread all over the Empire. The Court was filled with Cans and great Lords, either Tributaries or Friends who came in Perſon to comfort the afflicted Princes; and this great Reſort of Sovereigns laſted at leaſt ſix Months. An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

All addreſs'd themſelves to Octai, as the Emperor deſtin'd to ſucceed. But tho this Prince had the Power to act with full Authority, he would do nothing without conſulting thoſe whom the Grand Can uſed to adviſe with in his Councils; nay, he even proteſted he would not act as their Sovereign till the Diet ordained by the Law had been held, and they had examined whether he was capable of reigning. Couriers had been already diſpatched to all Parts of the Empire, to ſummon this Aſſembly; and it was not doubted but all thoſe who had a right to aſſiſt at it would haſten to Caracorom, where it was ſummon'd to meet.

It ſeem'd at this time that in this great Empire there was an Inter-regnum. Yet the publick Affairs did not ſuffer. Zagatai, who was the Guardian and Expounder of the Laws, made them be obſerved with great Exactneſs. They were held in greater Veneration than ever, becauſe the Memory of the Legiſlator was ſtill freſh in their Minds. And in truth, how could the People chuſe but have a great Veneration for a Prince who had render'd them the moſt formidable and reſpected People in the World? A Prince who had, beſides, all the Virtues requiſite in great Conquerors. He had a Genius fit for the forming great Enterprizes, a conſummate Wiſdom, and Prudence to carry them on, a natural Eloquence of Speech to perſuade,

a

An. Dom. 1226. Heg. 623. Mog. The Hog.

a Patience proof againſt all Difficulties, and able to ſurmount all Obſtacles; an admirable Temperance, a great Underſtanding, with a penetrating Judgment, which made him always chuſe the beſt of whatever was propoſed in an Inſtant: yet it muſt be confeſs'd that he was cruel and bloody, and treated his Enemies with too much Rigour. Octai Caan puſhed his Conqueſts much further into China; and his other Succeſſors in ſucceeding Ages, ſeeing almoſt all Aſia ſubjected to their Laws, carried their victorious Arms into Europe, even into ſome of our neighbouring Princes Dominions.

The End of the Hiſtory of Genghizcan.

AN

AN ABRIDGMENT OF THE HISTORY OF GENGHIZCAN's Succeſſors.

AFTER the Death of Genghizcan, his Dominions remained under the Government of his Children in the manner he had divided them in his Life-time. Capſchac remain'd to Prince Batou, the eldeſt Son of Touſchi. Zagatai had for his Share Tranſoxiana, called likewiſe Mauvaralnahar, and by the Europeans Zagatai, or the Country of the Uzbecks, and Turqueſtan. Tuli had Coraſſana, Perſia, and India. All the reſt was Octai's Share, that is to ſay, the great Hord called Ourdoubalec and Oloughyurt, where Genghizcan uſually reſided, the Country of the Moguls, the Northern China called Catay or Cathay, thay, which had Pequin for its Capital; and in fine, the other Countries by the Oriental Sea, and the Straits of Anian. Octai took the Title of Caan, which signifies Emperor. He began his Reign in 1228. and died in 1241.

It now concerns us to know what was the Fate of these four Princes, and the Order of their Successors down to Tamerlain, who having vanquished them all, left them only the Titles of Cans and Emperors of the Moguls; and to this present time the Descendants of Genghizcan are still preserved in the Cans of the Lesser Tartary, or Crim, in a direct Line, and in the Branch of the Uzbeck Cans who reign in Transoxiana.

The History of Touschi, Genghizcan's eldest Son.

TOUSCHI, whom some call Dgoudgy, and other Giougy, was a great Prince. His Race subsists at this day in the Lesser Tartary, notwithstanding the Invasions of the Muscovites into Great Tartary, since the Tartars acknowledged Selim Keray for their lawful Sovereign. Touschi in the Tartar Language signifies a welcome Guest. The Merkites having one day found a favourable opportunity to plunder Genghizcan's Camp, carried away his Wife who was big with Child, and brought her to Ounghcan her Father, who sent her back to him. She was brought to bed of a Prince on the Road, who was named Touschi because of this Adventure. This Prince grew very great, and much signalized himself by his brave Actions. He accompanied his Father in the Ca-

Carizmean War, and took himſelf the City of Jund, ſituate on the Banks of the River Jaxartes. Genghizcan was ſo pleaſed with his Conduct, that he ſoon after gave him the Sovereignty of the Empire of Capſchac, the Country of the Getes, and Turqueſtan. Touſchi ſettled himſelf in Capſchac[1], and died ſix Months before his Father, in the ſame Year 1226. Fifty eight Princes of his Race in a direct Line have reigned after him, and ſat on the Throne of Capſchac.

His Son Batou-Can, his firſt Succeſſor, conquer'd the Alani, the Aſſites, the Ruſſians or Muſcovites, the Bulgares, and ſeveral other Nations. He even croſs'd thro Ruſſia, and pillaged and ravaged Poland, Moravia, Dalmatia, and marched into Hungary to go and beſiege Conſtantinople; but Death came and interrupted his great Deſigns in the Year 1256. Batou did ſeveral other conſiderable Exploits; and it is reported that he was the moſt liberal and generous Prince in the World.

After the Death of Batou-Can, Bereke-Can his Brother ſucceeded him, and became a Mahometan. He had a bloody War with Hulacou, Prince Tuli's Son. After which, deſirous to execute ſome part of Batou's Deſigns, he went as far as Conſtantinople, and ravaged all the Country. In fine, having reigned ten Years, he died in 1266.

After him the Empire of Capſchac was poſſeſs'd by Mancoutem or Mongatmur, the Son of Dogan the Son of Batou; and this Mancoutem was ſirnamed Kilk, which was the Name of Genghizcan's Great Great-Grandfather.

[1] Capſchac is ſituate on the North ſide of the Caſpian Sea, where Aſtracan is, and reaches as far as Siberia and the frozen Sea, where Archangel is.

Cazaz the Son of Tazaz, called alſo Toudebencay, the Son of Dogan, was the fifth King of Capſchac.

The 6th was named Tocta or Belgaba, the Son of Mancoutem Kilk.

The 7th, Ertec, the Son of Toul, the Son of Kilk; and to him is attributed the firſt Original of the Tartar Tribe of Rous Ertec.

The 8th, Janibec, the Son of Ertec. This Janibec being informed that Aſchraf, the Son of Timurtach, the Son of Tchouban, who had been before Vizier to Sultan Abouſade, had uſurped the Kingdom of Azerbijana or the Medes, from the Princes the Children of the Emperor Abouſaydcan, the King of Perſia and the Medes, who were the Deſcendants of Hulacou-Can, Genghizcan's Grandſon, he marched againſt this Uſurper, paſt the Straits of Derbende, and arrived at Tauris, which he took. He afterwards vanquiſhed Melik Aſchraf, ſeized of his Treaſures, and made himſelf Maſter of the Country; and after having left in Tauris Prince Birdi Bey his Son, he returned to Capſchac, where he died in 1349.

The 9th, Birdi Bey, the Son of Janibec, who left Tauris as ſoon as he heard of his Father's Death, and came to Capſchac.

The 10th, Kildy Bec, another of Janibec's Sons.

The 11th, Norouz, who fraudulently made himſelf paſs for the Son of Janibec.

The 12th, Tcherkes Can, who was likewiſe ſet up for a Son of Janibec; ſuch were the Conjunctures of that time.

The 13th, Khedercan.

The 14th, Mazoud Can, Son of Khedercan.

The 15th, Bazartchican.

The

The 16th, Tocay, the Son of Schahycan.

The 17th, Tocluc Timur Can, the Son of Tocay's Brother.

The 18th, Mourad Coja Can, Tocluc Timur's Brother.

The 19th, Coutlic Coja Can, Tocay's Brother.

The 20th, Ourouſcan, who had for his Children Tocta Caya, Cotlucbouga who was kill'd by Tocatmichcan, and Timur Melic. He died in 1376.

The 21ſt, Tocta Caya, the eldeſt Son of Ourouſcan. He alſo died in 1376.

The 22d, Timur Melic Aglen, the Son of Ourouſcan, who fought againſt Tamerlain, and was wounded in the Fight.

The 23d, Tocatmichcan Aglen, who after having been aſſiſted by Tamerlain againſt Ourouſcan, Tocta Caya, and Timur Melic, and eſtabliſh'd in the Throne by his Aſſiſtance, made war upon his Benefactor in 1376. and was vanquiſh'd by the ſame Prince Tamerlain in 1388, 1391, and 1395.

The 24th, Timur Cotluc Aglen, the Son of Timur Melic, who had alſo ſerved Tamerlain in 1388, and in 1390, againſt Tocatmichcan; as likewiſe in 1391, and in 1395.

The 25th, was Schady Bec, notwithſtanding the Inſtallation of Coirytchac Aglen by Tamerlain, in the Month of April 1395.

The 26th, Poulad, the Son of Schady Bec, altho Tamerlain did not acknowledge him for Can.

The 27th, Timur, the Son of Timur Cotluc, altho not acknowledged by Tamerlain, who had inſtall'd and acknowledged Idecoucan.

The 28th, Gelaleddin, Son of Tocatmich Can.

The 29th, Kerim Birdi, alſo the Son of Tocatmich.

The 30th, Kepeccan, the Son of Tocatmich.

The 31ſt, Bahhira, another Son of Tocatmich.

The 32d, Cadir Birdycan, another Son of Tocatmisch. He marched againſt Idecou, who was inſtall'd by Tamerlain, and was kill'd in the Fight.

The 33d, Idecou.

The 34th, Sidi Ahmed.

The 35th, Derviſch, the Son of Alchycan.

The 36th, Koutchuk Mehemed Can, the Son of Tocatmiſch

The 37th, Dolet Birdy Can, the Son of Taſch Timur.

The 38th, Barrac Can, the Son of Cabargic.

The 39th, Cayaſeddin Schadi Bec.

The 40th, Mehemed, the Son of Timurcan.

The 41ſt, Hadgy Keray Can, Son of Mehemed Can, who died in 1475, and left twelve Sons. This great number of Princes was the Cauſe that the Empire of Capſchac fell into Confuſion, ſo that three Sons were ſeen to reign as Cans at one time; which occaſioned a War that ruined ſeveral Provinces, of which the Muſcovites got poſſeſſion. The great Empire of Capſchac had been infallibly ruined, if Sultan Mahomet, the ſecond Conqueror of Conſtantinople, touched with the Misfortunes of theſe Princes, had not taken care to ſuccour them. For this purpoſe he ſent Ghedic Ahmed Pacha, who took the City of Caffa from the Europeans, and afterwards that of Mancoup, out of which he carried away all the Inhabitants Priſoners. Prince Mengheli Keray, Son of Hadgy Keray, was found amongſt them, and loſt his Liberty. He had been Can for ſome days, but having been vanquiſhed by his Brothers, he had taken refuge at Mancoup, which was then in the Chriſtians Hands, and waited an Opportunity to remount the Throne. But he was not long a Priſoner; Mahomet II. ſoon re-placed him in it.

it. Thus Mengheli Keray was the 42d King of Capſchac.

The 43d, Mehemed Keraycan, the Son of Mengheli.

The 44th, Gazykeraycan the Son of Mehemed, who was depos'd after ſix Months Reign.

The 45th, Saadet Keray Can, who gave his Brother Sahibkeray in Hoſtage to Sultan Selim the Ottoman Emperor. From this time the Turks gave one thouſand and fifty Aſpers per Day, as a Penſion to the Cans of Crim Tartary, and other Penſions to the Lords of this Can's Court, as may be ſeen in the Book Kunhalakhbar.

The 46th, Iſlam Keray Can, the Son of Mehemed Keray. In his Reign the Kingdom was divided into two Factions; the one were obedient to Saadet Keray Can, and the other to Iſlam Keray Can; ſo that in 1517 the two Parties came to Blows on the Banks of the Boriſthenes, and thoſe on Iſlam Keray's Side had the better. Saadet Keray was obliged to ſave himſelf by flying to Conſtantinople, where the Turkiſh Emperor gave him a Penſion.

The 47th, Sahhibkeray, who cauſed Iſlam Keray to be kill'd, and was himſelf, after having reign'd a long time, depos'd by Sultan Soliman II. and ſent to Rhodes, to be impriſon'd there. The Muſcovites took from him the City of Cazan on the 9th of July, 1552, a Place ſituate in Capſchac, to the Northward of Aſtracan, on the River Volga.

The 48th, Dolet Keray Can, the Son of Sultan Mobarec, the Son of Menghely Keray Can, who died in 1577.

The 49th, Mehemed Keray Can, who was depos'd for having diſobey'd the Grand Seignior.

The 50th, Islam Keray Can, taken out of Prison again from Rhodes. He dy'd in 1588.

The 51st, Gazy Keray Can. He was a learned Prince, an excellent Poet, and an able Musician. The Grand Seignior increas'd his Pension to a hundred Livres a Day, because this Prince had done great Services to the Ottoman Empire in the War with Persia, where he shew'd, that he was endow'd with all the Qualifications requisite in a great Officer. Yet he was depos'd for some time, but afterwards re-establish'd, and dy'd in 1607.

The 52d, Fatehkeray Can, who was almost immediately deposed.

The 53d, Selamet Keray Can, the Son of Dolet Keray Can. He dy'd in 1610.

The 54th, Janibec Keray Can, who went into Persia in 1617, by Order of the Porte. He went to besiege Caffa at the Head of 40000 Tartars. He was nevertheless depos'd in 1621, and afterwards re-establish'd in 1627.

The 55th, Mehemed Keray Can, kill'd in 1627.

The 56th, Anayet Keray Can, the Son of Gazy Keray Can, depos'd in 1637; and afterwards put to death at Constantinople in the same Year.

The 57th, Behader Keray Can, the Son of Selamet Keray Can. He dy'd in 1641.

The 58th, Mehemed Keray Can, the Son of Selamet Keray Can; who was depos'd in 1644, and restor'd again; and a second time depos'd in 1664.

The 59th, Islam Keray Can, the Son of Selamet Keray Can, who dy'd in 1653, after having made War with Poland during the space of fourteen Years.

The 60th, Adelkeray Can, the Son of Tchouban Keray Can. He was depos'd in 1671, and sent back Prisoner to Rhodes, from whence he had been taken.

The

The 61ſt, Selim Keray Can, who reign'd in 1673.

The 62d, Dolet Keray Can, the Son of Selim Keray Can. He was depos'd, and ſent away to Rhodes, and afterwards to Chio. This was a Prince who was much beloved by his Subjects, and was accounted a great General.

The 63d, Kaplan Keray Can, who was depos'd in 1708. He had gone into Circaſſia to reduce ſome Rebels; but being beaten and put to flight, the Grand Seignior depos'd him, and eſtabliſh'd in his Place Dolet Keray Can, the Son of Selim Keray Can.

The Branch of the Uzbec Cans, Kings of Tranſoxiana, deſcended from the ſame Touſchi Can, the Son of Genghizcan.

UZBEC Can King of Capſchac, deſcended from Touſchi, was ſtript by Tamerlain, both he and his Succeſſors, of the Province of Tranſoxiana. He had a Son named Gehan Bec, of whom deſcended Cheybec Can, the Founder of that Dynaſty, named Dolet Uzbekyan.

Cheybec Can was the Son of Sultan Berrac, Son of Abulkayr Can. He retook Tranſoxiana from Tamerlain's Children in 1498, after the death of Sultan Mirza Huſeyn, Tamerlain's Grandſon. After which he enter'd Coraſſana in the Year of Grace 1507, from whence he drove out Badyazzaman; but he was himſelf at laſt defeated and kill'd, by Chac Iſmael Sefevi, near the City of Merou, in the Year 1510.

The 2d was Couchican, who dy'd in 1529.

The 3d, Abouſayd Son of Couchangi, who dy'd in 1532.

The

The 4th, Oubaydallah Can, Cousin of Cheybec, who dy'd in 1539.

The 5th, Abdallah Can, who dy'd in 1540.

The 6th, Abdallatif Can, who reign'd in 1541.

All these Princes, and their Successors, have always been, and are still at this Day, at war with the Kings of Persia, of the Race of Chac Ismael Sefevi, Descendents of Chec Sefy. We do not know the Names of those who have reign'd since Abdallatif Can: We only know that he had for his Successor Berrac Can of Samarcand, and Seid Burhan Can of Bocara in 1556, as may be seen in Mirsidy Aly's Voyage, Sultan Soliman's Envoy.

The Successors of these Princes still reign in Transoxiana, but each has his particular Dominions; one is Can of Bocara, another of Samarcand, another of Balc, &c.

The History of Zagatai Can, Genghizcan's second Son.

ZAGATAI Can was a most accomplish'd Prince, and excell'd his Brothers. He was also more equitable, and more exactly observ'd the Laws made by his Father. He had for his part Transoxiana, the Country of the Yugures, the great City of Caschgar near Tebet, the Kingdom of Bedacschan, and the City of Balc, which several learned Men affirm to be the antient Bactria. He govern'd all these Countries with the Assistance of Prince Caraschar Nevian, whom Genghizcan had given him for his Visier, and who was Tamerlain's Ancestor in the fifth Degree. This Caraschar was was the Son of Sugougen, Genghizcan's Kinſman.

Zagatai, after the death of his Father, choſe the City of Bechbalec for his Abode. He was, however, almoſt always with his Brother Octai, who loved and reſpected him as his Maſter, altho he was but his younger Brother. After him one and thirty Princes, his Children and Nephews, reign'd in this Country, which was ſome time after call'd by his Name Zagatai.

His firſt Succeſſor was Biſoumencay Can.

The 2d, Cara Hulacou, the Son of Metouca; ſome call him Menouca the Son of Zagatai. He mounted the Throne after the death of his Brother Biſoumencay, by the Aſſiſtance of Caraſchar, who dy'd during his Reign, in the Year 1254.

The 3d, the Queen Argana Catun, Daughter of Noureltchy Gourcan.

The 4th, Nalygou the Son of Baydar, Son of Zagatai.

The 5th, Mobarek Scha the Son of Cara Hulacou, Zagatai's Grandſon.

The 6th, Berrac Can, the Son of Biſſoun, or Bayſourtoua, the Son of Menouca. He had a War with Abaca the Son of Hulacou, his Couſin, and againſt Coublay Caan. He dy'd in 1260.

The 7th, Nikepey Can, the Son of Saryan, the Son of Zagatai.

The 8th, Bouca Timur.

The 9th, Dava Can, the Son of Berrac Can. He was accounted a very juſt King.

The 10th, Kevendgikcan.

The 11th, Baligou.

The 12th, Abiſouca, the Son of Dava Can.

The 13th, Kepec Can.

The 14th, Eltchikeday Can, the Son of Dava Can.

The 15th, Davatmur.

The

The 16th, Turmechirin Can, who dy'd in 1336, much fear'd of his Neighbours.

The 17th, Dginkechy.

The 18th, Biſoun Timur Can, the Son of Abouken.

The 19th, Aly Sultan, of the Race of Octai Can.

The 20th, Mehemed Can, the Son of Poulad, the Son of Kevendgik.

The 21ſt, Cazan Sultan Can, the Son of Iſſour Aglen.

The 22d, Daneſchmendge Can, of the Race of Octai Can.

The 23d, Beyan Couly Aglen, the Son of Sorgadou, the Son of Dava Can.

The 24th, Timurchah Aglen, the Son of Biſoun Timur Can, the Son of Abouken. The great Lords in his Reign uſurped the Authority, becauſe he was a very weak Prince in his Underſtanding.

The 25th, Togaltimur the Son of Aymelcoja, the Son of Dava Can. He a little re-ſettled the Affairs of the State, and obliged ſeveral Lords to obey him. He dy'd in 1372.

The 26th, Elias Coja Can. He return'd to Tranſoxiana at the Head of a numerous Army of Getes, and gave Battel to Tamerlain, who was join'd with Mir Huſſein.

The 26th, Adel Sultan.

The 28th, Caboulchah Aglen, the Son of Dourgy, the Son of Eltchykeday Can, the Son of Dava Can, who was inſtall'd in 1373.

The 29th, Syorgatmich Aglen, the Son of Daniſchmend Can; to whom Tamerlain gave the empty Title of Can, without leaving him the leaſt part of the Power.

The 30th, Sultan Mahmoud Can, the Son of Syorgatmich. Tamerlain cauſed his Name to be written written on the top of his Orders, to make the People believe that he obſerv'd Genghizcan's Laws.

The 31ſt, Toumen Cotluc Aglen, alſo crown'd by Tamerlain in 1390.

Tamerlain dying, and his Succeſſors not obſerving any longer the Law which ordain'd the Eſtabliſhment of Cans in the Family of Zagatai, Genghizcan's Son, there is no more mention made but of the Succeſſors of Tamerlain.

The Hiſtory of Octai Caan, Third Son of Genghizcan, and his Succeſſor.

OCTAI began to reign in 1226. He generally reſided in Oloughyurt, a City but a little way diſtant from Caracorom. He was juſt and liberal. He ſent an Army in purſuit of Sultan Gelaleddin.

They reckon nineteen Succeſſors of Octai's Race in the Empire of Oloughyurt; but theſe Succeſſors were ſome of them the Children of this Prince, and ſome the Children of Tulican his Brother. He ſent Argounaga in 1235, into Coraſſana as Governour; and having heard of the Deſtruction of Herat, which was the Capital, he cauſed this City to be rebuilt by an Emir named Azzeddin Moccadem Heraouy, ſirnamed Jamebaſ, whom he ſent thither for that purpoſe, who alſo cauſed the Lands in this Country to be again ſow'd and manur'd in 1238. In fine, Octai Caan, after having reigned thirteen Years with as much Gentleneſs as Juſtice, died much regretted of his People, in 1241.

Prince Keyouc Can, his Son, whoſe Mother was the celebrated Tourakina Catun, was his Suc-

Succeſſor, and aſſembled a general Diet in his Father's Camp. He mounted the Throne with the univerſal conſent of the People, at Oloughyurt, in the Year 1245. But he did not long enjoy the Empire, for he died in the Year 1246.

Hiſtorians make no mention of the Princes the Children of Keyouc Can, nor of Octai's other Children. They muſt doubtleſs have been too young to ſupport the Grandure of the Imperial Throne; becauſe Batou, the Son of Touſchi King of Capſchac, uſed all his Endeavours, after the Death of this Prince Keyouc Can, to make them receive a Prince of the Race of Tuli for their Emperor: And at laſt he effected his Deſire; for Mongou Can, the Son of Tulican, ſucceeded: and ſince that time no Prince of Octai's Poſterity has aſcended the Throne.

The Hiſtory of Tuli-Can, Genghizcan's fourth Son.

PRINCE Tuli had extremely diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his Valour during Genghizcan his Father's Life-time, who gave him the honourable Title of Oluc Nevian, that is to ſay, Great Prince; and he was indeed a very great General. He had the Management of all the Money to pay the Army, as alſo of the great Hord or Royal Camp; and he was, beſides that, great Steward of the Emperor's Houſhold.

After the Death of his Father, he poſſeſt the ſame Poſts under Octai Can his Brother, at Oloughyurt; and therefore was content to put Governours in Coraſſana, Perſia, and in other Coun-Countries which were left him by his Father the Emperor. But this great Prince did not live long; for he died in 1229. three Years after Genghizcan.

He left eight Sons, four of whom reſembled their Father in Courage: The four others are not mention'd. The eldeſt of theſe Princes was called Mangou Can, the ſecond Hulacou Can, the third Coublay Can, and the fourth Articbouga. When Prince Mangou Can was by the Intereſt of Batou Can advanced to the Empire after the Death of Keyouc Can, he did not renounce the Kingdoms left him by his Father Tuli, but united them to the reſt of his Empire in 1250, and ſent Hulacou Can his Brother into Coraſſana and Perſia in quality of Governour. Mangou Can reigned ſeven Years with all the Juſtice and Conduct that could be expected from one of the greateſt Princes in the World. He died in 1257.

After Mangou Can, the Kingdom was poſſeſs'd by Coublay, who had no ſooner learnt the News of the Death of Mangou than he return'd from China, where he was at that time engaged in War, and ſat in the Throne of Oloughyurt; but Articbouga, the youngeſt of the four Brothers, oppoſed Coublay's Advancement to the Empire, and ſet up his Standard at the Head of a great Army. Theſe two Princes fought ſeveral Battels; and in the laſt, which was a very bloody one, Articbouga being vanquiſh'd, came and threw himſelf at his Brother's Feet, who only made him ſome Reproaches at firſt, but afterwards ſhut him up between four Walls cover'd with Thorns of the Tree Adragant, where he order'd that a ſtrict Guard ſhould be ſet over him to his dying Day, which happen'd a Year after. Thus Coublay Can remained the peaceable Poſſeſſor of the Empire. He reign'd twenty five Years, in which he went on ſeveral great Expeditions both into China and other Places. In 1265 he was informed of the Death of his Brother Hulacou, who was at that time in Perſia; and he immediately took care to inſtal Abaca Can, the Son of Hulacou, in the Throne of Perſia, Coraſſana, and India: He alſo gave him ſeveral other Countries of great Extent, which had been newly conquer'd by Hulacou Can. The Actions of Coublay, both in China and elſewhere, are too many to be related in this Abridgment. There are ſeveral entire Books of his Life and Exploits. He died in 1294.

Coublay had for his Succeſſor his Grandſon Timur Can, ſirnamed Olagiaytou, the Son of Hakim or Dgetekem, who reign'd twelve Years, and died in 1306.

After him the Empire paſt to Couchilay Can, the Son of Dgeneſec, Son of Termebilay, Son of Dgeketem, Son of Coublay.

The 5th Succeſſor of Tuli was Togyay, the Son of Couchilay.

The 6th, Tayzy Can, the Son of Noulik, ſirnamed Bilectou.

The 7th, Anouchirouan, the Son of Dara, the Couſin of Tayzy. This Emperor was a Man of excellent Morals; but he gave too much Power to the Governours of Provinces, who acted as Sovereigns, and cauſed many Troubles in the Empire.

The 8th, Tocatmir, the Son of Timur Can.

The 9th, Biſourdar.

The 10th, Ayke, the Son of Biſourdar.

The 11th, Ylenc Can.

The 12th, Keytmour.

The 13th, Arkitmur.

The 14th, Eltchy Timur Can, who went to Tamerlain, and lived in his Court till the Death of this Prince; after which he returned to Oloughyurt, where he aſcended the Throne in 1405.

The 15th, Waltay Can, who deſcended in a direct Line from Prince Articbouga, the fourth Son of Tulican.

The 16th, Orday, the Son of Orday, the Son of Melic Timur.

The 17th and laſt, Aday, the Son of Arkitmur. Theſe two laſt Cans lived ſo obſcurely, that they are looked on as their Great Anceſtor Articbouga, from whom they deſcended, and who never was number'd amongſt the Cans.

From this time there is no more Talk at Oloughyurt of the Princes deſcended from Genghizcan, but only of thoſe who deſcended from Coublay, and who remained Kings of China, of whom there is mention made. The Princes of the Poſterity of Hulacou Can, Kings of Perſia and India, have alſo made ſome noiſe. Theſe puſh'd their Conqueſts as far as the Straits of Anyan, the fartheſt Parts of the Eaſt, as will be ſhow'd in the Hiſtory of Hulacou Can, Tuli's Son.

The Hiſtory of Hulacou Can, the ſecond Son of Tuli, and of his Poſterity.

WHEN Mangoucan[a], the eldeſt Son of Prince Tuli, was raiſed to the Empire of Oloughyurt, after the Death of Keyouc Can,

[a] It muſt be read Mangou Caan, and obſerved that thoſe who have ſucceeded Octai had, like him, the Title of Caan, that is to ſay, Can of Cans.

the Son of Octai, he ſent Prince Halacou his Brother into Perſia, to reign in his ſtead, in quality of his Viceroy, reſerving only to himſelf the Sovereign Right and Title of King. Hulacou being come to his Government in 1250, received the Petitions preſented him againſt the Abaſſide Califf Muſtaſim Billah. On theſe Complaints, and particularly thoſe made by the great Aſtrologer Naſireddin Touſi, who, being diſpleaſed with this Califf, was retired into Perſia, he took up a Reſolution to make War upon Chaldea, to puniſh Muſtaſim Billah for the Ills he had occaſion'd. For this reaſon he ſent to ask the Aſſiſtance of Mangou Can; and when he had received ſome Forces from him, he marched towards the Weſtern Countries at the Head of three hundred thouſand Tartars, and arrived before Bagdat, of which he form'd the Siege: and having ſoon render'd himſelf Maſter of this City, he put to death Muſtaſim Billah, the laſt of the Abaſſide Califfs, and entirely deſtroy'd their Race, in 1258.

After this Expedition, he went into Syria, and took all its Cities. Then he paſt into Anatolia, which he conquer'd, and gave the Government of it to Azzeddin Pervane. He put to death the Vizier Seifeddin Touctchy, and ſettled in his Place the learned Schamſeddin Mehemed Jouini, Author of the Hiſtory of Genghizcan, entitled, Gehankuſcha, and gave him for his Lieutenant his Brother Aladin Atalmulc. After making theſe great Conqueſts, and having reigned for fifteen Years in Perſia, Syria, Meſopotamia, Chaldea, and Anatolia, Hulacou Can died in 1265.

Abaca Can his Son ſucceeded him, and mounted his Throne by Order of Coublay Can his Uncle.

Uncle. He gave battel to Bereke Can King of Capſchac, his Couſin, the Son of Touſchi, who was at War with Hulacou his Father, and who was advanced as far as Conſtantinople. He beat Bereke, and reigned ſixteen Years with much Honour and Greatneſs, and died in 1281.

The 2d Succeſſor was Nicouder, otherwiſe called Ahmed Can, Brother to Abaca, and Son to Hulacou. He embraced Mahometaniſm, reigned two Years and three Months, and died in 1284.

The 3d, Argoun Can, the Son of Abaca Can. He put to death the Grand Vizier Schamſeddin Jouini, who had ſerv'd the State in four Reigns, and died himſelf, after ſeven Years Reign, in 1291.

The 4th, Ghendgiatou, the Brother of Argoun, and the Son of Abaca Can. He reigned but four Years, being kill'd by Baydou Can his Couſin, in the Year 1295.

The 5th, Baydou Can, the Son of Tragay, the Son of Hulacou Can. He died alſo in the Year 1295.

The 6th, Sultan Maymoud Gazan Can, the Son of Argoun, the Son of Abaca, the Son of Hulacou. He made a great noiſe in the World, and died in 1303. having reigned eight Years.

The 7th, Oladgiaytou Sultan Mehemed Codabende, the Brother of Gazan. In his Reign was finiſhed the Hiſtory entitled, Tarikh Gazany, the Author of which was Fadlallah, which Monſieur Petit de la Croix tranſlated into French in 1690. This Prince built the City of Soltanya in Perſia, which he made his Reſidence, and where he died in the Year 1317, after having done many great Exploits, and reigned fourteen Years.

The 8th, the great Sultan Abouſayd Behadeur Can, the Son of Codabende. He render'd himſelf renowned for his Valour and Magnificence. He reigned twenty Years, and died in the Year 1335. He was buried near his Father Codabende, under the fine Dome of the Moſque of Soltanya, in which all the Alcoran is writ in Golden Letters round the Walls. After the Death of this great Prince, the Monarchy of the Moguls in Perſia decay'd, and fell to Ruin. The Princes and great Lords of the Kingdom made themſelves petty Kingdoms of their Governments. They indeed ſettled Cans of the Race of Hulacou over them, giving them the Title, but reſerving to themſelves all the Authority. We find the Names of eight Cans of Genghizcan's Race, who reigned after theſe mention'd, but who had only the Name of Emperors; for the Princes the Children of Abouſayd did not continue to live at Soltanya, but made war one againſt the other, and were overcome by the Ilcanians, whoſe Founder was Buzure Haſſan, the Son of Chec Huſeyn Ghurcan, of the Race of Genghizcan. Theſe are the Names of the eight Cans.

The 1ſt was Arpacan, the Son of Aly, the Son of Baydou Can, the Son of Tragay, the Son of Hulacou, who reigned but one Year, and died in 1355.

The 2d, Mouſa Can: he mounted the Throne of Azerbijana, in which the City of Soltanya was ſituate, built by Codabende. But Buzure Haſſan ſet up at the ſame time for Emperor another Prince of the Race of Hulacou, called Mehemed, who attack'd Mouſacan, who was joined with Alyſchah, another Can of Hulacou's Race. Alyſchah was killed, and Mouſa put to Flight.

Flight. Mehemed cauſed his Head to be cut off by the Aſſiſtance of Buzure Haſſan, in 1336.

The 3d, Mehemed Can, whom ſome call Mahmoud; he was the Son of Magiouny, the Son of Amoudgin, the Son of Hulacou Can. He reigned after the Death of Aly, and died in 1337.

The 4th, Tagur Can, who was the preſumptive Heir of the Empire, fled into the Country of Mazendran.

The 5th, Bouca Timur Can.

The 6th, the Princeſs Daughter of Mehemed Can. Her Name was Chahzade Chahibek Catun. She married a Prince of the Race of Hulacou, and gave him the Title of Can, in 1338.

The 7th, Soliman Can, the Son of Mehemed, the Son of Sanki, the Son of Ahmed, whom others called Chimed, the Son of Hulacou Can, the Husband of Chahzade Chahibek Catun.

The 8th, Dgehan Timur Can, the Son of Alatyanky, the Son of Reiatany Can, of the Race of Hulacou.

After this time the Cans were put down, and the Crown of Perſia went to Melik Achraf, the Son of Timur Tach, the Son of Tchouban, Vizier to Abouſayd Can, who was vanquiſh'd by Janibec the Emperor of Capſchac. Mean while, the Son-in-Law of Emir Tchouban, who was called Buzure Haſſan, the Son of Chec Huſein Gurcan, the Son of Argoun, who was no more than a Bey, render'd himſelf ſo powerful by the yielding up of his Wife Dilchadaga, the Emir's Daughter, from whom he was divorced, to Sultan Abouſayd, that this Can made him his chief Favourite, and gave him the Government of Anatolia. Haſſan ſo well managed his Affairs, that after the Death of Sultan Buzure Hassan, he put himself at the head of a great Party, and at last got himself crown'd King of the Medes, and afterwards of Chaldea, by the taking of the Cities of Bagdat, Hille, Vaset, and Basra, which had been possess'd by Melikachraf Tchoubanien, who was the Founder of the Monarchy of the Ilcanians.

Janibec Can of Capschac, left his Son Birdy Bey at Tauris; but Birdy Bey returned to Capschac after the Death of his Father, which happen'd in 1349. as has been before related in the History of the Emperors of Capschac. He then left the Country of Azerbijana to Sultan Avis, the Son of Buzure Hasan, of whom Dilchadaga was the Mother.

This Sultan killed the Rebel Ahmardgic, and retook the Cities of Tauris, Selmas, Soltanya, Ardeville, Coy, Diarbekir and Chirouan. After which, having divided his Kingdoms betwixt four Children, he died in 1375.

Huseyn, the Son of Avis, was crown'd after the Death of his Father; but the Faction who supported his Brother Ahmed, deprived him of his Life.

Ahmed, another Son of Avis, after having received great Succours from Cara Mehemed a Turcoman, the Founder of the Monarchy of the Black Weathers, or Cara Coinlu. This Cara Mehemed put him and his Children to death in 1410. And thus ended the Race of the Ilcanians. Afterwards Tamerlain drove out of Tauris the Princes of the Black Weathers in 1388.

Such was the end of the Descendents of Hulacou Can in the Kingdom of Persia. After which, Tamerlain, who pretended to be descended ſcended from the Poſterity of Genghizcan in the fifth Degree, by the Wives of Prince Caraſchar Nevian, from whom were ſprung the Princes of the Family of Berlas, very famous in Tranſoxiana: Tamerlain, I ſay, who was the Nephew of Hadgi Berlas, the Heir of this Family, which was the fourth Tribe of the Oriental Turks, render'd himſelf abſolute Maſter of Perſia, and his Succeſſors quite aboliſhed in that Country the Name and Power of the Cans deſcended from Genghizcan.

The End of the Abridgment of the Hiſtory of Genghizcan's Succeſſors.

AN ABRIDGMENT OF THE LIVES of the AUTHORS, out of whose Works the History of Genghizcan has been collected.

5347

ABULCAIR, a Turkish Author, who died in the Year 1554. Heg. 962. composed a History of the Turks, entitled, Fatah Namesy Taouaric Al Osman: It is in Quarto in the King's Library, numb. 1314, or 1499. The Preface to this History is a historical Poem, containing 389 Distichs, each of five Feet and a half, after the Measure Mustay-lon, Mustaylon-faylon. This is the Author we have made use of in forming the Plan of Genghizcan's History; but he not being ample enough to furnish a compleat History, we have translated several other Authors who have written ex professo the History of Genghizcan, who are hereafter mention'd in their Places. This Author is also called Taschkuprizade, and also Moualla Abulcair Ahmed, the the Son of Muſtapha, the Son of Taſch Kupri. He compoſed many Works, treating of all ſorts of Sciences; and among the reſt, one Encyclopedia, in which there are 150 ſorts of Sciences treated of. He is Author of the Hiſtory of the learned Turks and Arabians who flouriſhed under the Ottomans, entitled, Alchacaic Annamania; and alſo of a univerſal Chronicle, which is entitled, Naovadiralachar. There is another Abulcair Cazuini, who has writ a Hiſtory of Ozman the third Califf after Mahomet; but he is not of the number of thoſe Authors who have made mention of Genghizcan.

Abulfeda. This Author was the Sovereign Prince of Hama in Syria. His Name and Titles at length were, Sultan Almalic Almuayd Amadaddin Abulfeda Iſmael, the Son of Malic Alafdal Nouraddin Aly, Son of Jumaladdin Mahmoud, Son of Omar, Son of Schahinſchah, Son of Ayoub, of the Family of the Aoubites. He died in the Year 1331, Heg. 732. His Book treats of Geography, entitled Takouim Albuldan. He obſerves that he had read the Books of Geography compoſed by the Arabians, and that he found nothing in them that gave him Satisfaction. For example, Ibni Haucal, who was moſt skill'd, does not obſerve the true Pronunciation of the proper Names of Cities and Towns, nor their Longitude and Latitude; ſo that the Reader remains ignorant of their true Name, and the Climates in which they are ſituate. Alſcherifalidriſy, called in France the Arabian of Nubia, gives no better Satisfaction in theſe Points; no more than Bincourdadebe, nor the Books of Zidge or Ephemerides. Thoſe who have taken the pains to put the true Pronunciation of the Names, ſuch as Kitabalanſab par Samaany, Almuſchtarac par Yacut Hamavi, Mazilalirtabe, lalirtyabe, and Kitabalfaiſal, have not given the Longitudes nor the Latitudes, ſo that one is ignorant of the Situation of the Cities and Countries. This has obliged me, ſays Abulfeda, to collect in this Geography what has been diſperſed in theſe Authors, yet without pretending to mention all the Cities in the World, nor even the greateſt part of them, becauſe all the Books which have been written on this Science contain but a very ſmall number of them: For example, the Kingdom of China, in which the Arabs give the Deſcription of but very few Cities; nay, they do not ſo much as mark the Pronunciation of their Names, or Situation, no more than of the Empires of India, Bulgaria, Circaſſia, Muſcovy, Ruſſia, Siberia, Poland, Valachia, nor the European Countries from the Thracian Boſphorus, which they call Alcalige Alconſtantini, as far as the Weſtern Ocean, where there are great and vaſt Kingdoms, whoſe Names and Hiſtories are unknown to the Arabs; as well as the Countries of the Blacks in Africk on the South ſide, or the Abyſſinia or Ethiopia, the Zanguebar, which ſome call Zendge, Nubia, Tecrour, Zayla, of which the Arabians have ſcarce made mention: They have obſerved in their Books only the Countries of the Mahometans. Yet, as the Proverb ſays, one had better know one part, than be ignorant of all, and not abandon the Study of a thing entirely, becauſe one does not know it perfectly. Abulfeda has divided his Book into Geographical Tables, in the manner of Bingezla's medicinal Tables. He has in the Preface deſcribed the whole World in general, the Kingdoms, Provinces, and Seas. He has given an account of 623 Countries, beſides thoſe marked down in his Tables, according to the Order of the Climates by Ptolomy. He gives the true true Pronunciation of the Names of the Cities and Towns, with their Longitude and Latitude; the Names of the Authors out of which he has taken the Account of each City; the Name of the Province it is in, and a short Description of it. This Work was afterwards translated into the Turkish Language, with Notes upon it, by Sipahi Zade, and dedicated to Sultan Amurath III. Abulfeda has also composed a Chronological History in two Volumes, called Mouctasarfy Acbaralbaschar. His Manuscript is in the King's Library, numb. 734.

Abulfarage, is the Author of the Book of Dynasties. His Name is Almusrian Margrigorious Abulfarage Binalhakim Haroun Almalaty. His Book is entitled, Alzayl a la Taric Mouctasaraddoual, that is to say, the Supplement to the Abridgment of the Chronological History of the Dynasties. He was a Jacobite Christian of the City of Malatia in Cappadocia. It was writ in the Arabick Language, and divided into ten Chapters, which contain as many Dynasties, in this Order. 1. The Chronology of the Saints since Adam the first Man. 2. Of the Judges of Israel. 3. Of the Kings of Israel. 4. Of the Chaldean Kings. 5. Of the Kings called Magi. 6. Of the antient Greek Kings who were Idolaters. 7. Of the Latin Roman Kings. 8. Of the Greek Emperors who were Christians. 9. Of the Arabian Kings who were Mahometans. 10. Of the Mogul Kings. It is not certain when he was born or died. We only know that he finished his History in the Reign of Argoun Can, the last of Genghizcan's Grandsons. The Manuscript of the Dynasties is in the King's Library, numb. 738. It has been translated into Latin by Mr. Pocock an Englishman, and printed in the Year 1663.

Abou

Abou Muſlim; he was likewiſe called Gazy Marouzy, that is to ſay, the Warrior of Merou. His Book, which is in the Turkiſh Language, is entitled, Kitab Abou Muſlim Mahani, which ſignifies the Book of Abou Muſlim born at Mahan. Mahan was a City of Coraſſana, ſituate in 37 deg. 30 min. of Latitude, and in 95 deg. 30 min. of Longitude. He was a martial Man, and did great Services to Aboulabbas Seffah; but this Califf, for Reaſons of State, put him to death. The Book is in four Volumes in Folio, in the King's Library, numb. 1294.

Adnane, that is Magededdin Mehemed Adnane. His Book is entitled, Tarikh Turqueſtan, and treats of the Chronological Hiſtory of Turqueſtan, of the Nations of the Turks and Tartars, and of the Rarities in thoſe Countries. It is dedicated to Tocmac Can, King of China.

Ahmed Bin Arabſchah. See Arabſchah.

Alfaras, a Geographer cited in Abulfeda.

Allubab, is a Book of Geography cited in Abulfeda.

Almakine, or Almacine, that is Alſchec Almakine Georgios, the Son of Alamid Abou Elias, the Son of Abylmakarim, the Son of Abittib a Chriſtian. His Book is entitled Tarikhalmuſlimin, that is to ſay, a Hiſtory of the Saracens. It is an Extract of the Hiſtory of Tabary, and of that of Armouny. It treats of the Life of Mahomet the falſe Prophet, of the Califfs his Succeſſors, and of other Kings who reigned during the time of theſe Califfs, down to Malic Azzehir Rucneddin Baybarſe King of Egypt; and he ends at the Reign of the Atabecs in Egypt. There is a Manuſcript in the King's Library, numb. 740. which ſeems to be the firſt part of the Univerſal Hiſtory, of which this, which has has been translated by Erpennius, is the second Part.

Alyconschty. See Couschtchy.

Ala Jouini. See Jouini.

Amadeddin; the same as Binketir.

Atalmulc. See Jouini.

Beizavi, is the Cady Nasireddin Abdallah Bin Omar Albeizavi, who died in the Year 1299. Heg. 699. His Book is entitled, Nizam Attavarikh, and signifies the Order of Chronological Histories. He composed it in the Persian Language. He was a Cady, or Judge. He has treated of most of the Asian Monarchs, and particularly of the antient Moguls. It is in the King's Library, num. 1513. and was brought thither from the Levant by M. Petis de la Croix jun.

Bin Abdallatif, that is to say, the Emir Yahya, the Son of Abdallatif Alcasbini Alschiai, who died in the Year 1552. Heg. 960. His Book is writ in the Persian Language, and is named Lubbattavarikh, that is to say, the Marrow or Substance of History, which some corruptly pronounce in French, Lebtarie. He follow'd the Sect of Schias, that is to say, the Religion which the Persians profess'd. He treats of the general History of Asia in brief. He finishes with the Reign of Schah Ismael Sefevi, the Son of Chec Haidar Ismael, who was crowned King of Persia in the Year 1514. The Author finish'd his Work in 1541, and died in 1552, in the City of Casbin, where he was born. His Manuscript is in the King's Library, numb. 1499. It has been translated into Latin by Monsieur Gomin, and Monsieur Thevenot his Uncle had it printed.

Binalouyardy, that is, Zeinaddin Omar Bin Almouzaffar Binalouardy, who died in the Year 1358. Heg. 760. This Arabian Author has treated of the the Geography he has extracted from the Eaſtern Authors. His Book is entitled Khariadatalagyaib, that is to ſay, the admirable Pearl, in one Volume in Quarto. He treats of the ſeven Climates of Ptolomy, and of the Rarities found in the Earth, as Minerals, Plants, and Animals. There is in it a Geographical Map of the World, after the manner of the Orientals. It has been tranſlated into the Turkiſh Language, and dedicated to Mir Oſman, the Son of Eskender Pacha. It is in M. Colbert's Library; and was brought from the Levant by M. Petis de la Croix jun.

Bin Arabſchah, that is, Alfadel Ahmet Bin Mehemed Bin Arabſchah, a Henbelite, who died in 1431. Heg. 854. This Author was an Arabian and Mahometan, born at Damas. He wrote the Life of Tamerlain, which the learned M. Vatier, Profeſſor in the Royal College, Uncle of M. Boivin, alſo Profeſſor of Greek in the ſame College, has tranſlated into French out of Arabick, and cauſed it to be printed at Paris in 1658. The Title of this Book is Adgiaib Almacdouar Fy Naouaib ou Acbar Timur, that is to ſay, the Wonders of Predeſtination, touching the Scourge of the Life of Tamerlain. Tho this Hiſtorian, forced by the Truth, has ſaid fine things of Tamerlain concerning his Conqueſts; yet he has filled his Book with Invectives againſt this Conqueror, in hatred to him for having cauſed to be trod under his Horſes Feet all the People of Damas, this Author's Country. Yet theſe Calumnies have only ſerved to encreaſe the Glory of this Conqueror. The Perſian Scherefeddin Yezdy, who was an Eye-witneſs of Tamerlain's Exploits, has writ, in his own Tongue, a Hiſtory of him, and in a very eloquent Stile related the Acts of this great

General, in form of a Journal; so that he has undeceived the World, and freed them from the Prejudices that this Arabian Author had inspired them with against his Prince, in doing which he has gained himself a universal Esteem. Yet this Book of Bin Arabschah is writ in a fine Arabian Style, very nervous, and ends in Periods of Rhime, after the manner of the Arabian Eloquence. There is a fine Manuscript of this kind in the King's Library, brought thither by M. Paul Lucas, a celebrated Traveller.

Bin Ayas. See Mehemed Bin Ayas.

Bin Calican; this is the Cady Schamseddin Aboulabbas Ahmed Bin Mehemed Albarmaky Alarbely Alchafay, who died in 1281. Heg. 681. He composed in Arabick a Book entitled, Ouafiat a la Ayan, the Deaths of illustrious Men, on which he has formed this History. He was a Native of the City of Arbele in Assyria, and was made Cady of Grand Cairo. He was of the Chafaites Sect, which was esteem'd one of the four Orthodox Sects by the Sunnis Mahometans. His Post of Cady so employ'd him, that he could not finish his Book; but several learned Persons have added Supplements to it: for he spoke but of 846 famous Men, to which one has added 30, others 60, and others 237; as Haroubi, Bin Aibec, Bin Habib Halaby, and others.

Bin Cavindeschah. See Mirconde.

Bin Courdadebe; that is, Abdallah the Son of Courdabebe. His Book treats of Geography, and is entitled, Almasalic or Almamalic, that is to say, Roads and Empires. He has given the Distances from one City to another, the Revenues of Trac and other Provinces, and the Expences the Prince is obliged to live at. He has has besides writ a Book of History, which Masaoudi much praises in his Book entitled, Murouge Addahab; it is quoted by Abulfeda. He died in the Year 912. Heg. 300.

Bin Fadlallah. See Kirmani.

Bin Houcal, a Geographer quoted by Abulfeda. His Book treats of abundance of Cities, but does not tell us the true Pronunciation of their Names, which renders it very obscure. The Title of it is Almasalic or Almamalic, Roads and Empires.

Bin Ketir Dimischqui; that is, the Historian Alimam Alhafiz Amadeddin Abulfeda Ismael Bin Omar, who died in 1372. Heg. 774. His Book is entitled, Albydaya or Annyhaya Fittaric, that is to say, the Beginning and End of Chronicles. 'Tis a History in ten Volumes, divided by Millenaries, each containing five Monarchies. It reaches down to the Year 1337. Heg. 738. Several learned Men have made Comments on this Book; such as Bin Schahna, Alainy, Albarzali, Bin Hagiar, and Bin Dilschad.

Bin Ketir Fergani; that is, Mehemed Bin Ketir Alfargani. His Book is entitled, Alfusoul Attalatin, that is to say, the thirty Chapters. It treats of the Motions of the Heavens, and of Geography. It has been translated by the learned Golius, a Dutchman, who calls it Elementa Astronomica, printed at Amsterdam in 1669. The Author lived in the time of the Califf Almamon, who died in 833. This same Author wrote another Book, entitled, Almouharrar Almakamil Fitastihhalkora, treating on the Planisphere. But the Book cited in this History of Genghizcan, is that which has been translated by Golius.

Bin Moucaffa. This Author has translated out of the Pahlavian Language, which is the antient Persian, into Arabian, the History of the antient Persians, or Taric Alfourse, under the Title of Schahname; on which Arabian Book of Bin Moucaffa's was made the celebrated Persian Poem containing 64000 Distichs of Firdeousy, dedicated to Sultan Mahmoud Subuctekin King of Persia, as is reported in the Book of Masaoudy, called Murouge Addahab, or the Golden Mead.

Bin Mustaousy. See Hamdallah.

Bin Sayd Carnaty, that is, Aboulhajan Noureddin Ali, Son of Mousa, Son of Saide of Grenada. His Book is entitled, Almougarrab Fy Mahhasin Ahel Almagrib, that is to say, the Elogium of the People of Africk, and is in fifteen Volumes. He has composed a History of Maroc, entitled, Alanis Almoutrib Rouad Alcartas, Fi Acbar Ahelalma grib, or Bunian Madinatfas. It is quoted by Abulfeda, as having treated of Cambalec, which is the same City with Pequin in China.

Bin Schahna, that is, Mouhhib Addin Abiluelid Ibrahim Bin Mehemed Ibnal Achahhna, a Native of Aleppo, who died in 1478. Heg. 883. He has composed a Universal History, entitled, Rouad Almanadir Fy Ilmalaouail, or Alaouakhir, that is to say, The Gardens of fine Prospect on the Sciences of the Antients and Moderns. He treats of the Creation of the World, and of the History from Adam down to the Hegira, and continues it as far as the Year 1403. Heg. 806. He foretells the Prodigies that must necessarily happen before the Day of Judgment. He made another Book of Law, entitled, Lisan Alhouccam Fymarifat Alahhcam, that is to say, the Tongue of Judges on the determining Law-Suits. This last Book is in the King's Library, numb. 612. and is the same that is quoted in this History of Genghizcan.

Birouini, that is, Abi Rihhan Mehemed Bin Amed Albirouni Alcarismi. His Book treats of the Mathematicks and Aſtronomy, and is intitled, Canoun Almaſaoudi, that is to ſay, the Maſaoudian Canon; thus called becauſe he dedicated it to Sultan Maſaoud, the Son of Mahmoud Subuctekine King of Perſia, in the Year 1039. Heg. 431. It is one of the moſt compleat Works on theſe Subjects of any that has been writ. He alſo compoſed another Book, in which he has confuted and abſolutely condemned the Uſe of Taliſmans, Magick, Conjurations, and the Predictions ſet forth in Almanacks. This Book is entitled, Adgiaib Attabiaia, or Algaraib Aſſaynaaya, that is to ſay, the Wonders of Art and Nature. It is quoted by Abulfeda, who calls it Canoun Almaſaoudi.

Caſchi; that is, Chamſeddin Mehemed Alcaſchi, a Native of Cachan in Perſia. His Hiſtory in Perſian Verſe, is entitled, Tarikh Gazanican. It treats of the Hiſtory of Gazan Can, one of Genghizcan's Deſcendants.

Cavendeſcha. See Mirconde.

Cazvini, or Casbini; that is, Zacaria Bin Mehemed Bin Mahmoud Alcouſi Alcazvini. His Book is entitled, Adgaib Almacloucat, that is to ſay, the wonderful Natures of Creatures, and is in the Arabian Tongue. It treats of Natural Hiſtory, of the Qualities of Animals, Vegetables, and Minerals, as alſo of Waters, aerial Spirits, Faries, Genii, and Taliſmans; but all to confute the Jewiſh Rabbins. His Work is much eſteem'd by the Orientals. It has been tranſlated out of Arabick into the Turkiſh Language. It is in the King's Library, numb. 1346. There is another Cazvini, who is the Perſon meant by Abdallatif, Author of the Book called Lubbattavaric before-mentioned. He is cited by Golius in his Notes on Alfargani, p. 4, 5, 6, and 22.

Cherefeddin Yezdy, is the learned Moulla Cherefeddin Aly, a Native of Yezde in Persia, who died in the Year 1446. Heg. 850. He has composed the Journal of Tamerlain in Persian, entitled, Zafarname Emir Timur Gourcan, that is to say, the History of the Conquests made by Prince Timur the Can's Son-in-Law, which he publish'd at Schiraz, and dedicated to Mirza Ibrahim Ben Harage, having finished it in 1424. Heg. 828. He has made the Date very ingeniously in these Words; Kelam Sounnifa Fy Schiraze, that is to say, Discourses composed at Schiraze, but the numerical Letters being added, make the number 828. which is the Date of the Book. An Encomium has been made upon him by Condemir in his Book entitled, Habibassuyar. He prefers him to all the Authors who have treated of the History of the Moguls and Tartars, both for the Purity of the Language, which is Persian, and also for the Strength of his Expressions, and Beauty of his Style. The Roads are exactly described, and he has given much Light into the Geography of his Country. It has been translated into the Turkish Language by Hafiz Mehemed Bin Ahmed Alagemi. This Author had before composed a first Volume, entitled, Moucaddamay Zafarname, that is to say, a Prologue to the Book of Conquests. This Moucaddama contain'd a Description of Oulous, that is to say, the Tribes and Mogul Families under the Government of Zagatay Can, the Son of Genghizcan. There was also a Supplement composed by Tadge Assilgian, and finished in 1410. Heg. 813. containing the History of Scharoc, the Son of Tamerlain, and of his Son Ouloug Bek. This Book, which is in the King's Library, n. 1508. has been translated into French by M. Petis de la Croix jun.

Cherif Edrisi, is the Cherif Mehemed Bin Mehemed Alidrisi Assafy Assacali. He was of the Race of the false Prophet Mahomet, of the Branch of Hasan, and the Edrisites, of the Sect of the Sofis, or mystical Divines. He was an Inhabitant of Sicily in the Year 1153. Heg. 548. His Book treats of Geography, entitled, Nouzhat Almuschtac Fy Iftirac Alafac, that is to say, the Divertisement of the Curious, or the Division of the Earth into Kingdoms. He shews the Distance and Length of Roads by Miles, and by Leagues, following the Order of Ptolomy's seven Climates. Roger King of Sicily order'd him to compose this Work. It has been translated out of Arabick into Latin by Gabriel Sionita, a Marionite, Interpreter to the King, and Professor in the Royal College; who, assisted by his Collegue John Hesronita, have entitled their Work, Geographia Nubiensis, not knowing the Name or Country of the Author. It is rather the Book of Roger I. The two Marionite Translators believed the Author to be a Christian; but Casaubon, who was heretofore Librarian to the King, and other learned Men, have maintained that he was a Mahometan. The Impression of this Book is full of Faults, because the Points of the Arabick Letters are not properly placed, so that one cannot be certain of the true Pronunciation of the Names of the Cities and Towns contained in it. The Author is elsewhere called Abouabdallah Mehemed Bin Mehemed Bin Abdallah Bin Emir Almoumenin Idris.

Schicardus. Altho this Author was not an Oriental born, yet we put him here amongst the Eastern Authors, as being the Translator of a Book entitled, Taric Beni Adam, that is to say, the History of the Children of Adam. Marc Taler, of the City of Ulm in Germany, who was a Man of Letters as well as the Sword, in the War he had in the upper Hungary against the Turks, being at the plundering of the Castle of Filec, which had been before taken from the Christians, preserv'd a Manuscript written in the Turkish and Arabick Languages, which he found in the chief Mosque in this Place, entitled Taric Beni Adam; and being skilled in the Turkish Language, he translated all that was writ in that Tongue in the Manuscript, and made use of a Turk of that Place to translate the Arabick. Yet this did not content him; for being desirous to dedicate this Manuscript to the Emperor, with some Notes on the History it contained, he defer'd his Design till his return to his own Country, and met at Tubinge with a Professor of the Hebrew Tongue named William Schicard, with whom he labour'd to explain the learned part of this Manuscript, and found it to be a very compleat Account of the Genealogies and Histories of all the principal Families of the East, from Adam down to the last Kings of the Persians, Moguls, and Tartars, writ in Turkish and Arabick. This Manuscript was a Roll of Paper, like those the Latins call'd in times past Volumen, and which the Arabians at this day call Toumar, from which perhaps is derived the Name of Tome. After this Fashion the Treaties of Peace between France and the Turks are written, and kept roll'd up. And thus this Manuscript called Taric Beni Adam has had three Interpreters, namely, Marc Taler, the Turk who explained the Arabick, and William Schicard, much more learned than the other two.

Condemir, that is to say, Caiaseddin Bin Houmam Addin. His Book is intitled Habibassuyar Fy Afrad Albaschar, that is to say, The curious part of the Lives of illustrious Men; is a History which he has extracted from that which his Father Mirconde had compos'd, and entitled, Raouz et Assafa, to which he has made Augmentations. He dedicated this Book to the Secretary of State belonging to the King of Persia, Schah Ismael Sefevi, who gave him the Name of Habibullah; and for that Reason the Book had the Name of Habib given it in the Year 1508, Heg. 927. in the Reign of Lewis XII. He is Author of another History, which is entitled Coulassat Alacbar; or, The Cream of Histories. 'Tis in the third part of the Book Habibassuyar that he treats of the Emperors of the Moguls and Tartars, and of Genghizcan and his Children. The Book is divided into three great Volumes, and is very much esteemed in the Levant. The Manuscript is in the Library of the learned Monsieur Renaudot.

Coudaay, that is, the Cadi Aby Abdallah Mehemed Bin Salama Bin Cadar Alcouday. His Book is intitled, Ayoun Almaarif, The Fountain of Sciences. 'Tis a chronological universal History, which treats of the Prophets, Califfs, Kings, and Princes, and concludes with the Fatimite Califfs. He dy'd in the Year 1062. Heg. 454. He has wrote another History of Egypt, but 'tis on account of the first that he is quoted in this Book of Genghizcan. There is another Coudaay, the Author of a Book of History, intitled, Touhhfat Alcadim; but it is not him we speak of.

Couschtchy, that is, Hafiz Mehemed Bin Ali Alcouchtchi, the Fowler. His Book is intitled Tarikh Khitai, The Chronological History of China, China. 'Tis an Extract of a History of Turqueſtan, the Author of which was Adnane before mentioned. He has also compos'd a Book of Astronomy intitled, Risalalat Hisab, or Hayat.

Dgouini, see Jouini.

Diu an Alinscha. 'Tis a Collection of Epistolatory Letters in the Turkish Language. There are some in all the Eastern Languages. The learned Person who publish'd them at Constantinople, had collected so great a number of Letters, written to different Lords and Officers of the Ottoman Empire, on various Subjects, that there were very few People at the time of their Publication, who did not think themselves obliged to have one of the Books. It contain'd not only a large number of private Letters, but also a great many Acts of Justice and Law; which might be of use to Men to know in their way of Trade, in foreign Parts. It is in Monsieur Colbert's Library.

Fadlallah, that is, Coja Rascbid Addin Fadlallah Vizier, the Son of Abulcair Arraschide Attabib Alhamadani. His Book is intitled Taric Mobarec Gazani, that is to say, The August History of Gazan; dedicated to Sultan Gazan, the Son of Argoun Can, who then reign'd in Persia, and kept his Court at Tauris. Gazan was the Son of Argoun, the Son of Hulacou, Genghizcan's Grandson. In this Prince's time they had almost no knowledge of the History of the antient Moguls, but barely by Tradition; and it had been impossible to have compiled a compleat Account of them, if an old Mogul Officer, called Poulad Dgin Kesanc, had not employ'd a long time in searching amongst the Oriental Nations, and in the Northern Parts of Asia, for some Memoirs recorded in Writing, of the Deeds of these Moguls and Tartars, and of the Victories gain'd by Genghizcan their first Emperor. This Poulad made a Collection of them, which he presented to Gazan Can; who put them into the Hands of his Vizier Fadlallah, the Son of a Physician, a Native of the City of Hamadan in Persia, the most able Historiographer of his Time, who made a compleat History in the Year 1294. And this Author, whose Manuscript in Folio was sent from Constantinople to the King, by the illustrious Ambassador Monsieur de Guilleragues, and is now in his Majesty's Library, assures us, that it is the first History of the antient Moguls that ever was writ in the Persian Language. It has been translated into French by Monsieur Petis de la Croix the Son, and was of great use to the Father in his perfecting this Book of Genghizcan. And this is what Hadgi Calfa says of this Author, in his Bibliotheque Orientale.

The Vizier Fadlallah has compos'd in Persian, a complete History of the Reign of Genghizcan and his Children, intitled Jamyattaouarikh, that is to say, A Collection of Chronicles. He observes, that after he had begun to write it fair, the Sultan Gazan dy'd, in the Month of Schaval, in the Year of the Hegira 704, which was the Year of Grace 1304; and was succeeded by the Sultan Mehemed Codabende, who commanded him to finish it, to put his Name in the Title Page, and to add the Description of the Countries and Cities of the Moguls, and of their Inhabitants, as also of the Tribes and Tartarian Nations: And that he collected together all he could find on this Subject, in the Histories and Chronicles which were given him by Persons appointed to search for them, who were Men of Learning of several Nations, and who had

Orders

Orders to assist him both with their Books and Pens. The Sultan also order'd him to add Geographical Maps. Pursuant to this Order, he wrote in the first Volume the History of Genghizcan, and the Mogul and Tartar Nations. In the second he relates the Death of a great many Princes of this Race, with the Dates of the Years when they dy'd: And in the third Volume he has shewn the Geography of the Countries belonging to the Tartars, Moguls and Turks; relating the History of each Nation, according to the Relations given of them in their Books, without any Alterations. The first Volume does then contain what he wrote in the Name of Gazancan, and by his Order, which he intitled Tarikh Moubarec Gazani; which is in two Chapters; one of the Rise and Greatness of the Turks and Tartars, and the other of the Moguls, wherein was the Life of Genghizcan. The second Volume contain'd what he writ in the Name, and by the Command of Sultan Olagiaytou Mehemed Codabende; which was also comprehended in two Chapters; one was the History of this Codabende, and the other was divided into two Sections; the first of which treated of the Prophets, Califfs, Kings, and Nations, from the Days of Adam, down to the Year of the Hegira 700. and the second was the History of the People of the Northern and Southern China, of Cachemir, the Indies, the Israelites, the Atheists, and the Efrenge, or Europeans. The third Volume contain'd the Maps of the Geography, with the Description of the Kingdoms, Cities and Towns, which made three great Volumes; the first of which is in the King's Library, and has been translated into French by Monsieur Petis de la Croix Junior, as before mentioned.

Fargani,

Fargani, see Bin Ketir.

Firouzabadi, that is, Magededdin Mehemed Bin Yacoub Alfironzabadi. His Book is an Arabick Dictionary, intitled Camous Allogha, that is to say, The Ocean of the Arabian Tongue, in 60 Volumes. It was writ in the Month of Schaval, or the Horse, in the Year of Grace 1414. Heg. 817.

Hadgi Mehemed is an Author who was a Merchant, and is quoted in Rubruquis.

Hamdallah, or Binmustaoufi, that is, Hamdallah Bin Abibakir Bin almustaoufi al Cazvini, who dy'd in the Year of Grace 1349. Heg. 750. His Book is a Historical Geography and Natural History in the Persian Language, intitled Nuzhatalcouloub, the Recreation of Hearts. It is divided into a Preface, three Chapters, and a Conclusion. The Preface is a Geography, according to Ptolemy's seven Climates: The first Chapter on the production and growth of Plants, on Minerals and Animals: The second treats of Men; the third of Cities and Countries; and the Conclusion treats of the Wonders of Nature: Amongst which he says, That the City of Casbin, of which he was a Native, was situate in a very fair Plain near Mount Alvende, not far from the City of Hamadan in the Country of the antient Parthians, in the 37th Degree of Latitude. There are some who will have it to be the Arsatia of the Antients, built by Aschky, or Arsaces, King of Parthia, who made it the Capital of his Empire. See Golius's Notes upon Alfargani and Strabo, lib. 2. It is in the King's King's Library, N° 1520.

Hezarfen, that is, Coja Husain Efendi, sirnamed Hezarfen, who dy'd at Constantinople in the Year 1682. He was a Friend to the French Nation. He has writ a History in the Turkish Lan-

Language, intitled Tankih Tavaricmulouc, that is to say, An Extract of the Annals of the Kings. 'Tis a General History of Asia. He began it in the Year of Grace 1670, and finish'd it in 1672. He extracted it from the Works of Maoulana Genabi an Arabian, and also from those of the Persian Mirconde, and several other Orientals; and from several Greek and Latin Authors. He has given Rules for taking the Longitudes and Latitudes of Countries. He has explain'd the difference of the Parasanga's, (a Persian Measure of the Roads, not every where limited to a set number of Furlongs) of Leagues and Miles. His Book is divided into four Parts: The first treats of the antient Persians, and of the Ptolemies of Egypt; the second of the Califfs; the third of the Ottomans; and the fourth of the Kings of all the Asian Nations. He finishes with a Description of China, and afterwards of America. It has been translated into French by Monsieur Petis de la Croix Senior.

Jacut cited in Golius. See Yacout Hamavi.

Jouini, that is, Aladdin Altamulc Bin Assahhib Bahaddin Mehemed Aljouini Annahhouy, who dy'd in the Year of Grace 1284. Heg. 683. He is call'd the Rhetorician, and excell'd in Learning. He was also call'd Coja Atalmulc. He compos'd his Book in the Year 1260, in the Reign of Mangou Caan the Son of Tulican, the Son of Genghizcan, intitled Taric Gehanguscha, that is to say, The History of the Conquest of the World. He observes that Genghizcan's real Country lay much to the North and East of the Desart-side of Tartary; and was of so great extent, that the true Country of the Moguls was eight Months Journey both in length and breadth: That the several sorts of People that inhabited it, were divided into Tribes call'd Moguls;

Moguls; and that among all these Tribes there was but one that was civilized, and that was that of Niron Caiat, of which Genghizcan the Son of Pisouca was the Sovereign after the death of his Father. He treats of the History of Genghizcan, and of Hulacou Can, his Grandson, and of other Kings in their time. He is quoted by Ouassaf in the beginning of his Chronological History.

Kirmani, or Bin Fadlallah, that is, Schahabeddin Ahmed Bin yahhia Bin Mehemed alkirmani Bin Fadlallah alkatib addimisqui, the Damascene Secretary. He dy'd Anno Dom. 1340. Heg. 741. His Works in 20 Volumes are intitled Masalic alabsar fil mamalic, or alamsar, The glancing of the Eyes into the Empires and Cities. This Work is in two Parts: The first treats of the Earth in general; the second of its Situation. It has been enlarged by Bin Schamseddin Mehemed Bin Yousuf alkirmani. It is quoted by Assiouti.

Macrizi, that is, The Schec Taquieddin Ahmed Bin Ali almacrizi; who dy'd Anno Domini 1441. Heg. 845. His Book is in Arabick, and treats of the History of Egypt: It is intitled Almaouaiz, or Alitibar; that is to say, Counsels and Examples. He compos'd fifteen other Books of History, and on other Subjects.

5343 Marraschi, that is, Scherif Zahiraddin Bin Assid nasiraddin Almarraschi, a Native of the City of Marasche in Cappadocia. His Book is intitled Taric Tabarestan, that is to say, The Chronological History of the Province of Tabarestan in Persia, near the Caspian Sea. He finish'd it in the Year of Grace 1476. Heg. 881.

Marraschi, an Abreviation of Marrakeschi, was the Chec Abouabdallahal Marrakeschi, a Native

tive

tive of the City of Meroc in Mauritania. His Book is of Geography, intitled Almasalik, or Almamalic; that is to say, The Roads and Empires. It is in Arabick in the King's Library, N° 732. It has been translated into the Turkish Tongue by Sid Mehemed Mudarris, a Professor of Languages in the College of the Sultan Mehemed who took Agria. This Marrakeschi did also compose a Chronological History, intled Tarikch Almarrakeschi, in the third part of his Book of Geography; which is the only one we have in France. He makes mention of several Transactions that pass'd in the beginning of Genghizcan's Reign; of his Laws, the Queens his Wives, and the four great Princes his Sons, who by their Valour distinguish'd themselves, and were more famous than all the great Generals of that Age.

Mehemed Bin Achmed Nisavi. See Nisavi.

Mehemed Bin Aias. His Book is intitled Naschac alazhar fi adgiaib alamsar, or alactar; that is to say, The Scent of Flowers, on the Rarities of Cities and Countries. It also treats of antient Kings, the Pyramids of Egypt, of the Talismans, and Curiosities which the antient Philosophers had made in this Kingdom. He describes the City of Grand Cairo and the River Nile. He begins his Book with a Discourse on Astronomy and the Spheres. It is in the King's Library.

Mehemed Tousy. See Selmani.

Mirconde, or Cavenschah, or Bin Cavendschah; that is, Mehemed Bind Cavenschah Bin Mahmoud, sirnamed Mirconde the Historian. His Book is divided into a Preface, seven Parts or Sections, and a Conclusion. Each Part makes a very thick Volume in Folio. He wrote it at Herat in Coraſſana, in a Caravanſera call'd Cancahal- cahaloculaſya, built by the Vizier Mir Aliſchir, to whom he dedicated this Work, which he intitled Raouzat aſſaffa fi ſirat alounbia, or almulouc, or alcoulaſa; which ſignifies, The Garden of Pleaſure, touching the Lives of the Prophets, Kings and Califfs. The Preface treats of the Science, or Art of Chronological Hiſtory: The firſt Part treats of the Creation, the Lives of the Prophets, and of the antient Kings of Perſia: The ſecond, of Mahomet and the four firſt Califfs: The third, of the Oummiades and the Abaſſides: The fourth, of the Kings of divers other Nations, Contemporaries with the Abaſſides: The fifth, of Genghizcan and his Children: The ſixth, of Tamerlain and his Children: The ſeventh, of Sultan Huſein Bicra; and the Concluſion treats of ſeveral Hiſtories which particularly relate to Geography, the Rarities of the habitable parts of the Earth, and the Wonders of Nature. The Fragment which has been made uſe of for this Hiſtory of Genghizcan, which was the fifth part of this Work, was lent by Monſieur Herbelot to Monſieur Petis de la Croix Senior, of which he took a Copy and tranſlated it, and has made uſe of it all in this Book: And when he ſometimes quotes in the beginning of Page 250. and afterwards in Page 40. 'tis becauſe he ſometimes reckons by the Pages in the original Manuſcript, and ſometimes by thoſe of his own Copy of it, not having had the original Manuſcript all the time he wrote this in his keeping. The two firſt of Mirconde's ſeven Volumes are in the King's Library, N° 150, and 160. This Author was the Father of Condemir before-mentioned.

Mahlabi, that is, Haſan Bin Ahmedal Mahlabi, whoſe Book of Geography is intitled Almaſa- lic, or Almamalic, Roads and Empires; dedicated to Azizbillah, an Abassi de Califf and King of Egypt, quoted by Abulfeda.

Nassireddin Tousi, is Nasireddin Mehemed Bin Hassan attousi, a Native of Tous in Corassana. He was in great Repute about the Year of Grace 1261, in the Reigns of Mustasim Billah Califf of Bagdat, and the Mogul King Hulacou Can, Genghizcan's Grandson by Tuli. He excell'd in the Knowledge of Geometry, Astronomy, and all other Sciences; as not only the Tables of Longitude and Latitude which he had publish'd, and which Gravius caus'd to be printed in the Year 1652, with those of Ouloughbek's, do sufficiently manifest; but he shines much more in the famous Astronomical Observations call'd Zige Ilcani, which he made at Meraga a City in Azerbijana, where he was the chief of all the Astrologers and Mathematicians whom Hulacou Can had call'd together in his so much admired Royal Observatory. He began his Observations at Meraga in the Month of Jumazyulevel, in the Year of the Hegira 657, and of our Lord 1259. His Book, which was written in the Persian Tongue, was intitled Zige Ilcani, and was divided into four Parts: The first treated of the History of Genghizcan and his Children, and of the manner how they conquer'd Asia: The second treated of the Motion of the Planets; of their Longitude and Latitude, or Situation: The third shew'd their rising and setting in the Horizon: The fourth treated of other Astronomical Observations and Operations. There have been several Commentators who have added many things to his Ephemerides and his other Works, as Husein Darir of Nischabour, Gayaseddin Gemschid, who compos'd compos'd Zige Cacani, to serve as a Supplement to the Ephemerides call'd Zige Ilcani.

Nimatullah, that is, Nimatullaf Bin Ahmed Bin Moubarac Arroumi, a Native of Anatolia. His Book is a Dictionary which begins with the Persian, and is explain'd in the Turkish Language. He dy'd Anno Dom. 1522. Heg. 929.

Nisavi; that is, Mehemed Bin Aly Nisavi. This Author, who has writ in the Arabian Tongue, was a Native of the City of Nisa in Coraſſana. He was Governour of this Place for the King of Carizme, and his Reputation brought him to the Knowledge of the Sultan Gelaleddin, who was then King of it. He cauſed him to come to Court, and be near his Perſon, giving him the Poſt of Secretary of State. From the time he was employ'd in this Sultan's Affairs, he made Memorandums of all that happen'd worthy notice in his time, and even of all that had paſt in the Family of Sultan Mehemed King of Carizme, the Father of Sultan Gelaleddin. He from theſe Memoirs compoſed a Book, entitled, Sirat Aſſoultan Gelaleddin, that is to ſay, the Life of the Sultan Gelaleddin, who was alſo named Amadeddin Iſmael. He was a great Enemy to Genghizcan, of whom he ſpeaks with as much Paſſion as Arabſchah did of Tamerlain. Niſavi is not a faithful Hiſtorian in the firſt Chapters of his Book; but the reſt are more exact. He is quoted in the Guliſtan of Schec Sadi. His Book is in the King's Library, numb. 845. He lived in the time of Genghizcan.

Selmani; that is, Mehemed Bin Mahmoud Bin Ahmed attouſi aſſalmani. His Book is a natural Hiſtory, entitled, Adgiaib Almacloucat, that is to ſay, the Wonders of Nature. It was in Perſian. He wrote it in the Year 1160. Heg. 555.

Tabari;

Tabari; that is, Imam Aboujafar Mehemed Bin Jarir, a Native of Tabareſtan, who died in the Year 921. Heg. 303. His Work is an univerſal Hiſtory, entitled, Taric Aloumam, or Almulouc, the Hiſtory of Nations and Kings. It is alſo called Taric Attabari. He begins with the Creation of the World, and finiſhes at the Year 915. Heg. 309. It has been tranſlated into the Perſian Language by Balami. Another has tranſlated it into the Turkiſh. There are two Supplements to it, one writ by Fargani, and the other by Hamadani, who died in the Year 1127. Heg. 521. 'Twas by means of his Supplement that the original Book came to be diſcover'd.

Taſchkunti, is Hafiz Mehemed Attaſchkunti, Pupil to the learned Alyalcouſchtchi. He compoſed a Hiſtory of Genghizcan's Children, which he entitled Tarikh Aldgenghiz, which has not yet appear'd in Europe. He is Author of a Hiſtory of the Uzbeck Cans, the Deſcendants of Genghizcan, who are diſperſed in Tranſoxiana and Turqueſtan, ſome of whom do at this preſent reign in thoſe Countries; and this Hiſtory is entitled, Tariſch Taſchkunti.

Ulugbec, is Ulugbec Mehemed, the Son of Scharoc, the Son of Tamerlain. His Book is entitled, Zidge Oloughbec, and Zidge Ilcani, that is, the Royal Ephemerides. He compoſed ſeveral other Works on the Mathematicks about the Year 1420, being at Samarcand, where he then reigned. He ſent for a great many Aſtronomers from all Parts of the World, to conſult with them about the Obſervations he had made with great Exactneſs on the Longitude and Latitude of the Planets. This Tartarian King was the Son of Mirza Charoc, the Son of Tamerlain. The Turks and Perſians at this time admire a Dial of a prodigious ſize, which was made by his Direction and Invention in the City of Samarcand, where, as alſo, in Turqueſtan, he reign'd the Space of 43 Years. This Prince, who was born in 1394. died in 1450. He had for his Tutors, Salahhaddin Mouſa, ſirnamed Cadizade, and Ghajaſaddin Gemſchid, who both died before the Book Zidge Ilcani was finiſhed, which was afterwards done by the Son of Ghayaſeddin, that is to ſay, by the learned Moulla Aly Bin Mehemed Alcouſchtchi the Fowler, who in one Year, as is reported, learnt all the Sciences. The Book of the Aſtronomical Obſervations of Ouloughbec, or Ulugbec, which is the ſame thing, is divided into four Parts. The firſt treats of Chronological Hiſtory: The ſecond of Geography, and the Riſing and Setting of the Stars in each Country: The third of the Situation or Poſition of the Planets, and of their Longitudes and Latitudes, and of all that is curious in the Art of Aſtronomy: The fourth ſhews the Motions of the Stars. Theſe are the beſt Ephemerides, and the moſt eaſy to be underſtood of any.

Yahhya, or Miryahhya. See Bin Abdallatif.

Yacout Hamavi, is the ſame with Jacut, quoted by Golius. His Name at length was Abouabdallah Yacout Arroumi Alhamavi. He was a Grecian Turk, tho he dwelt at Hama, and was at Bagdat in Chaldea. His Book treats of Geography, and is entitled, Almuſchtarac Sanan, or Amouctalaf Sanfan, that is to ſay, what is alike in Creation, and different in kind. He is Author of a Book of the Dynaſties of Kings, called, Kitabaddoual; as alſo of ſeveral learned Works. He has alſo compoſed a Book of Geography, entitled, Moadgem Albuldan, which ſignifies an Alphabet of Cities; of which an Abridgment has been made by Aſſiouti, entitled,

Al-

Almaraſid, that is, Obſervations. It is quoted by Abulfeda.

Zacut, a Jewiſh Author, alſo named Abraham. He compoſed a Book in Hebrew, entitled Sefer Jucaſſin, which is a Chronicle, containing the Genealogy of the Jews. He alſo treats of the Arabian Califfs and Princes, and of the antient Moguls and Tartars, and alſo of Turks ſprung from Mahan, from whom the Ottomans are deſcended. He was born in Caſtile in the City of Salamanca. His Work was printed at Cracow in the Year 1580.

Zehebi, is the Imam Hafis Schamſeddin Mehemed Bin Ahmed Azzahabi Almaſri Aſſamarcandi, who died in the Year 1345. Heg. 746. He was born in Cairo, and dwelt in Samarcand. He is Author of an Univerſal Hiſtory in twelve Volumes, entitled, Tarikhaliſlam, that is to ſay, the Hiſtory of the Muſſulmans. He relates all the remarkable Events and Actions of great Men as far as the Year 1340. Heg. 741. Several Abſtracts have been made from this Book; and among the reſt, Kitabalabar, Suiar Annoubala, Tabacat Alhouffaz, Tabacat Al Courra. There is a Supplement writ by Gezeri; another entitled Hafil, by Schamſe Sacaoui, who died in the Year of the Hegira 906. It has been abridg'd by Aladdin Ali Bin Calaf Alizzi, and by Schamſeddin Mehemed Algezeri, who died in the Year 1429. Heg. 833. Zehebi has alſo made a Hiſtory from it of the Califfs, Tarikhalkoulafa, in four Volumes, in which he treats of the Oumiades and Abaſſides. He is alſo the Author of the Hiſtory of Carizme, which M. Petis de la Croix made uſe of in this Hiſtory, and has put it all into the Hiſtory of Genghizcan. This Book was by the Perſians call'd Intichabſalatin, that is to ſay, an Abſtract of Kings, and makes a part of the great Hiſtory of Tarikhaliſtam. It begins in theſe Words, The fourth Rank of the ſecond Order of Kings, that is to ſay, of the Mogul Kings, the firſt of whom was the Great Genghizcan; and of the Kings of Perſia deſcended from him, the firſt of whom was Hulacou his Grandſon. This Book was writ in the Year 1536. Heg. 757.

****

The Names of the European Authors and Travellers, who are made uſe of to prove the Truth of the Facts related in the Hiſtory of Genghizcan.

Ammianus Marcellinus, a Latin Hiſtorian, a Native of Antioch. He lived in the Year 378. His Work conſiſted of thirty one Books, of which we have but eighteen; in which we find the firſt Original of the French, and ſeveral Antiquities of the Gauls. It has been tranſlated into French by Marolles Abbot of Villeloin.

Arian, a Philoſopher and Hiſtorian, a Native of Nicomedia in Bithynia, where he made his Studies. He was Author of the Hiſtory of Alexander the Great. He lived in the Reign of the Emperor Adrian. It has been tranſlated into French by Nicholas Parrot of Ablancourt, and by Witard de Roſoi.

Ariſtophanes, a Greek Poet.

Aſceline. In the Memoirs of Friar Simon of St. Quintin, in Vincent de Beauvais, mention is made of a Dominican Frier named Aſceline, who was ſent in 1247. by Pope John IV. to ſome Tartarian Princes. But his Memoirs have ſo little Appearance of being true, that we dare dare not quote what is in them, seeing there is not one Oriental Author to justify what they report: for Example, he assures us that the Can of Tartary is believed by the Tartars to be the Son of God. Frier Asceline spent three Years and seven Months in his Journey.

Barros; that is, John de Barros, a Portuguese, Dec. 3. Lib. 4. Chap. 1. who was born at Viseo in 1496. He is the Author of a History of Asia, which is entitled, Decadas d' Asia. He died in 1570. There are twelve Decades in his Work.

Benoit Goez, a Portuguese Jesuit, sent into China by Ecber a Mogul King of India, in 1603. We must distinguish him from Damien Goez, who was not a Jesuit.

Bernier, a Physician, Philosopher, and Traveller, is so well known, that there is no need to speak farther of him.

Bochart, is the Author of Geographia sacra Bocharti, or Phaleg, printed at Leyden in 1692. He was a Minister of the Reformed Religion at Caen in Normandy, and died in 1607.

Father Briet, a learned Jesuit, who died in 1669. a Native of Abbeville in Picardy. He is Author of the Parallels between the antient Geography, and the new European; and of a Chronology in Latin, in six Volumes.

Calvisius, a German, the Author of a Chronology in Latin, entitled, Sethi Calvisi Opus Chronologicum. He was born at Grosleb, a little Town in Thuringia. He died in 1617. He speaks of the Tartars in Silesia, pag. 807.

Carpin. This is Frier John du Plan Carpin, a Cordelier, who was sent by Pope Innocent IV. to the Can of Tartary, in the Year 1246. A Relation of his Journey is given by Hackluit, an Engliſhman; and Bergeron has put his Relation of it into a more regular Order. He preceded Rubruquis in his Voyage about ſeven or eight Years; for Rubruquis did not go from Conſtantinople for Tartary till the Year 1213. He aſſures us that Cathay is China.

Schicardus. See Schicardus amongſt the Oriental Authors.

Cluvier, is a Book of Geography tranſlated by Father Labbe a Jeſuit. He was a Native of Dantzick, and died at Leyden in 1623.

Diodorus, a Sicilian born at Agyrium, which is at preſent call'd San Philippo d'Agirone. He lived in the Reigns of Julius Cæſar and Auguſtus. He wrote the ſo much celebrated Hiſtorical Library, divided into forty Books, of which there remain with us but fifteen. They are writ in Greek, and have been tranſlated into Latin by Pogge, a Florentine, by Order of Pope Nicholas V.

Galanus, is Clement Galanus Furrentinus, a Theatine by Order, and a Miſſionary from the Holy See to Armenia. His Work is entitled, Conciliatio Eccleſiæ Armenæ cum Romana, teſtimoniis Patrum & Doctorum Armenorum. It was printed at Rome in 1650. and at Cologne in 1686. by the Title of Hiſtoria Armena Eccleſiaſtica & Politica. It ſpeaks of Haiton King of Armenia, and of his Journey to China. Galanus has writ ſeveral other Works, as an Armenian Grammar, a Dictionary, a Book of Philoſophy, Logick, Phyſick, and Theology, all in Armenian and Latin; and ſeveral pious Poems in Armenian. The People of that Nation hold him in great Eſteem, and avow that he underſtood the Armenian Tongue in the greateſt Perfection.

Golius,

Golius, that is, James Golius, an Arabick Professor in the University of Leyden. He was a Dutchman, born at the Hague. He had been Pupil to Erpenius, and succeeded him in his Place of Arabick Professor in 1624. He was also skill'd in the Mathematicks. Golius made a Voyage to Aleppo, and also went to Morocco with an Ambassador of the States. He presented to the King Moulazeydan the Great Atlas, and the New Testament in Arabick. He made a Petition to this King in Arabick, which the Arabs acknowledged to be very elegant; yet he could not pronounce the Arabick Tongue very well, for which reason he conversed in Spanish with that King, who understood that Language well. Golius published in 1636. the History of Tamerlain in Arabick and Latin; and afterwards at Amsterdam in 1653. the great Arabick and Latin Dictionary, entitled, Lexicon Arabicum, an excellent Book. He might well have omitted a great many Obscenities, which he innocently put in. He had a Brother who was a bare-footed Carmelite, named Peter Golius, who lived a long time in the Levant, and also understood the Oriental Languages, and translated out of Latin into Arabick, The Imitation of Jesus Christ, but in so mean a Style, that it was not much esteemed in the Levant. There is also another Translation of it by M. Petis de la Croix jun. into Arabick. James Golius has translated Alfargani's Astronomy, and called his Translation, Elementa Astronomica; in which he assures us that Cambalu should be writ Can Baleg, that Baleg signifies City, and Can Emperor; and that it is Pequin situated in 46 deg. of Latitude, according to Herair in Abulfeda, and in Ulugbec. The two Golius's were the Nephews of James Hemelar, one of the Canons of Anvers. Golius died in the Year 1700. or thereabouts.

Gruber, is a Jesuit.

Gulielmus of Tyre. This Author was born in the City of Tyre, in Phœnicia, of which he was Archbishop in the Year 1100. He was afterwards Chancellor of the Kingdom of Jerusalem in the Reign of Baldwin; and tho he was overwhelmed with Business, he did not cease to apply himself to write the History of this Kingdom, and of almost all Syria, which the other European Princes, join'd with the French, had conquer'd, and got from the Makometans. He lived a long time. He employ'd eight Years in this Work, which was conceal'd for near 400 Years before it was brought to light, which was not till the Year 1560. and printed at Basil in two Parts: the first of which contained twenty three Books of the Holy War; and the second, six other Books on the same Subject. 'Tis in this second Part that the Emperor Genghiz-can is spoken of. It was this William of Tyre who writ, in the time of St. Bernard, the History of the Holy Wars, lib. 4. chap. 9. and fancied that Theophilus Bishop of Antioch was the Person to whom St. Luke address'd the Acts of the Apostles: But he was very much mistaken; for this good Prelate, far from being contemporary with St. Luke and the Apostles, was not consecrated Bishop of Antioch till the Year 170.

Haiton. This Author was Nephew to Haiton King of Armenia, and was called the Lord of Courschi. In his Youth he bore Arms in the Service of the antient Moguls against the Turks. He went to Can-Balec, and offer'd his Service to Mangou Caan, some Years before King Haiton his Uncle went to the Court of the same Prince

Mangou,

Mangou, who was Grand Can, and King of China, to ask his Aſſiſtance againſt his Enemies. Mangon agreed to whatever they demanded; and when King Haiton returned to Armenia, this Author his Nephew accompanied him, and carried with him the Obſervations he had made of the Eaſtern and Northern Countries: but being very piouſly inclined, he reſolved upon turning a Religious; and in order to it, to go into the Iſle of Cyprus, to enter into the Order of the Præmonſtratenſes, an Order of Auguſtine Friars. And this Reſolution he effected in the Year 1305. Here this Religious at length compleated theſe Memoirs; and ſoon after being ſent for by Pope Clement V. who was retired into France, he publiſhed them in the French Tongue at Poictiers, aſſiſted by Nicholas Salconi, who afterwards tranſlated them into Latin in the Year 1307. which Book was printed in 1672. by the Title of the Oriental Hiſtory, which ſome have alſo called the Hiſtory of the Tartars.

Herodotus of Halicarnaſſus, is a Greek Hiſtorian, whom Cicero calls the Father of Hiſtory, and Prince of Hiſtorians. He lived 450 Years before the Birth of our Saviour. He compoſed at Samos his Hiſtory, in nine Books, which was found ſo excellent by the Aſſembly at the Olympick Games, that it had the Name of the nine Muſes given it, according to the Report of Suidas. He has taken notice of all that had paſt moſt remarkable in the World during the ſpace of 240 Years, that is to ſay, from the Reign of Cyrus to the Reign of Xerxes King of Perſia, in whoſe time he lived.

Hieronymus Xaverius. He writ in the Year 1598.

Hornius and Zonaras. See Zonaras.

Jacut,

Jacut, is Yacout Hamavi, an Arabian Author, whose Geography is cited in Abulfeda, and in Golius in his Notes upon Alfargani, as is before-mentioned.

Jornandes, was by Birth a Goth, the Son of Wamuth Alain. He was Secretary to the Goths, and afterwards Bishop of Ravenna. He wrote two Books of History in the sixth Century, in which he lived, under the Emperor Justinian. He composed his Book De Rebus Gothicis in 552. He composed another Book, entitled, De Regnorum Successione, in which he speaks of the Assyrians, Medes, and Persians. 'Tis on account of several Facts which he has related in this last Book, that he is quoted in this History of Genghizcan.

Josaphatus Barbarus, lived in the Year 1474.

Josephus, the Historian. He wrote in Greek, tho he was a Jew by Birth. He was the Son of Mattathias the High Priest, and his Mother was of the Blood Royal of the Maccabees. He was born in the Year 37. He lived in the Reigns of nine Emperors, from Caligula to Domitian. He wrote the seven Books of the Wars of the Jews, and was Eye-witness of the taking of Jerusalem by Titus Vespasian. He wrote twenty Books of the Jewish Antiquities, and several other learned Works.

Justin, the Historian, lived in the second Century, in the reign of Antoninus Pius. He made an Abridgment of the History of Trogus Pompeius, which was the reason that some accuse him of having caused the History it self to be lost by this Epitome of it. This History contained 44 Books, and Justin has kept the like number. His manner of Writing is much esteemed for the Fineness of the Latin.

Mark

Mark Taler. See Schicardus.

Marco Polo. This illustrious Venetian was of a noble Family: He writ his Travels in Italian, and intitled them Viaggidi Messer Marco Polo Gentilhuomo Venetiano. There are two Translations of them into Latin. He treats in his Book De Regionibus Orientis, of the Eastern and Northern Countries; in which he resided a great while, having some considerable Employments in the Court of Coublaycan, the Conqueror of the Southern China, which the Arabs call Matchin; which Genghiz-can, his Grandfather, had charged his Children to conquer, after he himself had gotten the Northern China call'd Catai. Marco Polo lived in those Parts eighteen Years; and Father Kircher, a Jesuit, says, That none of the Antients have written more amply than this Author, of the Kingdoms of the remotest part of the Orient. He went from Venice in 1272, with his Father and Uncle, and did not return till the Year 1295; in which time he apply'd himself to the putting in good order all the Remarks he had made in his Journey.

Father Martini. This Author was a Jesuit belonging to the City of Trent, who had been sent by his Superiors to China. He read in the Histories of this Country, all that had past from the first Establishment of that great Empire, to the Birth of our Saviour; and having himself compos'd a History, at his Return in 1651, he publish'd it in the Latin Tongue, with his Relation of the Wars of the Tartars, printed at Anvers in 1654; and likewise the History of China, printed at Munich in 1658; which gain'd him much Honour. His other Works have been also printed at Amsterdam in 1659: as likewise his new Atlas of China, which contains a fine Collection of Maps of the fifteen Provinces of this this Empire; to which this Father has added a Geographical Deſcription, and a Map of the Iſle of Corea, and another of Japan.

Matthew Paris, a Monk of St. Albans, the Author of the Hiſtory of England, who makes mention of the Tartars: And he gives the Recital of a circular Letter addreſs'd in the Year 1241, to the Duke of Brabant, by the Count Palatine of Saxony; in which are related the Actions the Tartars had done in his Country, and the great Ravages and Outrages they had committed there. He acquaints him, that St. Lewis the French King had made a Vow to arm againſt them, to drive them thence. This Author begins his Hiſtory of England in the Year of Grace 1066, and continues it down to the Year 1270; which was not printed at London till the Year 1570.

Paulus Jovius, a Hiſtorian of the ſixth Century, who dy'd at Florence in 1552. He was a Native of Como in Lombardy. He was at firſt a Phyſician, and afterwards was made Biſhop of Nocera by Pope Clement VII. He had a Penſion from Francis I. This Hiſtorian lived 69 Years, his Hiſtory contains 45 Books, and ends in 1544.

Plutarch of Cheronea, a City of Bæotia, a Philoſopher, Hiſtorian, and Orator. He lived in the Days of Nerva and Trajan. He travell'd into Greece and Egyyt, to conſult the Learned. He writ all he ſaw that was curious. His Book is intitled, The Lives of Illuſtrious Men, Greeks and Romans. There are two other Plutarchs.

Procopius of Cæſarea, a Hiſtorian who lived in the Reign of Juſtinian. He was Secretary to Beliſarius, during all the Wars that General waged in Perſia, Africa and Italy. He was made Prefect of Conſtantinople. His Works are contain'd in eight Books, two of the Wars of Persia, two of the Vandals, and four of the Goths. Father Claude Maltrait, a Jesuit, caus'd all Procopius's Works to be printed in the Year 1663.

Ptolomæus Claudius, a Native of Felousia. His Works treat of Geography, which he compos'd in Alexandria, and are contain'd in eight Books. He divided the Earth into seven Climates. He is the Author of the Almagesti.

Quintus Curtius, sirnamed Rufus. He writ the History of Alexander the Great. He lived in the Reign of Vespasian.

Ramusio, that is, John Baptist Ramusio, of Venice, who was skill'd in Languages. He dy'd in 1559. at Padua, being 72 Years old. He wrote three Volumes of Travels: The first contain'd the Description of Africa, and Prester John's Country: The second was a History of Tartary, and several other Travels: And the third, Voyages to the new World in America.

De Refuge's Geography.

Rubruquis, that is, Gulielmus Rubruquis, a Cordelier, sent by the King St. Lewis to Sartach a Tartarian Prince, who at that time made a great Noise in the World: He was there some Years after Carpin. The greatest of all the Tartar Cans was Mangou Caan, who then reign'd in the East and North Parts of Asia, and Batou Can in the Western Parts: These Princes were both of them Genghizcan's Grandsons. This Cordelier's Travels, who went from Constantinople in 1253, are found written in Peter Bergeron's Book, which he gather'd from Richard Hackluit an English Man.

Sanson, that is, Nicholas Sanson in his Sacred Geography.

Sanut, that is, Livio Sanuto, a French Man, who ſettled at Venice, and was made a Noble Venetian. He wrote a Book of the Geography of Africk, printed at Venice in 1588.

Scaliger, that is, Joſeph Scaliger, born at Agen in 1540, and dy'd in 1609. He was the Son of Julius Cæſar Scaliger, or de l'Eſcale. He dy'd at Leyden. He underſtood Greek and Hebrew. He ſtudied firſt at Bourdeaux, and afterwards at Paris. His Book is a Chronicle much eſteem'd.

Stephanus de Urbibus.

Strabo, a Philoſopher, who flouriſhed in the Year 20, in the Days of Auguſtus and Tiberius, born at Amaſia a City of Cappadocia. His Geography is divided into 27 Parts. He had been a great Traveller. He died in the twelfth Year of Tiberius's Reign.

Texeira, a Spaniard. He tranſlated the Hiſtory of Perſia, which was the firſt part of Mirconde's great Book call'd Raouzet Aſſafa, which was in ſeven Volumes, as may be ſeen under the Word Mirconde before-mentioned. Texeira has extracted thence this Hiſtory, which he has preſented to the World in Spaniſh; but it has been ſince tranſlated into French by Cotolendi. Texeira had travell'd into Perſia, and made himſelf acquainted with the Language of that Country; and thus enabled, he tranſlated this part of Mirconde's Works. He finiſh'd his firſt Part with an Abridgment of the Hiſtory of the Califfs, &c.

Thevenot the younger. He was a great Traveller, born at Paris, and died at Miana in Perſia, about eight Days Journey from Tauris, Nov. 18. 1667. He was Monſieur Petis de la Croix's Friend, ſo he took care to reviſe his Memoirs, and had them printed in three Volumes: The firſt contains his Travels into Turkey; key; the second his Travels to Persia; and the third to India. Monsieur Petis de la Croix jun. took care, being at Miana, afterwards to take up his Bones near the Caravansera, where they had been buried; and had them buried at Tauris, under the Altar of the Capuchins Church there, in 1676.

Tremellius, and Junius jointly wrote a Book call'd Biblia Hæretica; this Emanuel Tremellius, was born at Ferrara, and was the Son of a Jew. He was Professor of the Hebrew Tongue in the Academy at Heidelberg. He render'd into Latin the Syriack Version of the New Testament. After which he retired to Metz; from thence to Sedan to teach Hebrew, and there he died in 1580, being 70 Years old. He made a Version of the Bible, on which account he is cited in this History of Genghizcan.

Trigaut, that is, Nicolaus Trigautius, a Jesuit. He is the Author of a Book intitled, The Christian Expedition to China: In which he assures us, That the Capital of Cathay is Cambaleg; and that Cambaleg, which Marco Polo calls Cambalu, is the same City with that now call'd Pequin, situate in 46 Degrees of Latitude, which is agreeable to the Opinion of Harair in Abulfeda. And in this Matter this Jesuit's Opinion is conformable to the Eastern Geographers.

Vartomanus, that is, Ludovicus Vartomanus; who flourished in the Year 1506.

Xavier is Hieronymus Xavier, who lived in 1598.

Zacut. See Zacut among the Oriental Authors.

Zonaras, is John Zonaras, a Greek Historian who lived about the Year 1120. He was a Monk of the Order of St. Basil. His Books are Annals in three Volumes, which have been translated into Latin by Jerom Volsius, and printed at Basil in 1557. The first Volume contains the History of the Jews from the beginning of the World, to the taking of Jerusalem: The second treats of the History of the Romans, to the time of Constantine the Great: The third goes from Constantine to the death of Alexis Comnenes in 1118. He wrote some Ecclesiastical Works.

Zoroaster the celebrated Astrologer, King of Bactria, or Balc, lived in the Days of Ninus King of the Assyrians, who preserv'd his Ashes so long as his Empire endured. He has written Predictions and other Books of Astrology.

F I N I S.

Speedily will be published,

THE History of Tamerlain the Great, properly call'd Timur-Bec, Emperor of the Moguls and Tartars: Being an Historical Journal of his Conquests in Asia and Europe: Written in the Persian Language by Cherefeddin Ali, Native of Yezd, who was contemporary with Tamerlain: Translated into French by the late Monsieur Petis de la Croix, Professor of the Arabian Tongue in the Royal College; and Secretary and Interpreter to the King in the Oriental Languages: With Historical Notes and Maps: Now faithfully render'd into English.

JAN 25